CHAPTER I.

SKETCHES IN THE GARDEN.

Stars shining in the deep purple of a summer sky; June roses blooming and breathing sweetness on the soft cool night; leaves whispering; low faint sounds of falling waters from a fountain hidden in the foliage; and across the dim shadowy night the flaring lights and gaudy colors of a painted and gilded temple, in which the band is playing one of Strauss's tenderest waltzes.

The melodious strain is drawing to its close. The players attack the coda with crash and hurry, the pace intensifying as they near the end. All the waltzers have fallen out of the ranks, except one couple, and those two waltz as if it were impossible to tire—as if they were the very spirit of dance and melody, creatures of fire and air, motion incarnate.

The girl's golden head reclines against her partner's shoulder, but not with an air of weariness; the attitude expresses only repose; the graceful gliding step, the harmonious flowing movements, are as natural as the fall of waters or the waving of forest boughs. The rosy lips are slightly parted, the sweet eyes look starwards with a dreamy gaze. There is far more of spirit than of gross earthliness in the slim pillowy form, the fair and radiant face, which the stars and the lamps shine upon alternately, as those revolving figures circle—now in the glare of the orchestra, and then under those solemn worlds of light which are soon to look upon stranger, sadder, darker, crueller sights than this Sunday evening dance at the Closerie des Lilas.

There are some who think it is a wicked thing to dance on a Sunday evening, even after one has worshipped at one's parish church faithfully and reverently on Sunday morning; some there are who think it is wicked to dance at all; and there are others who worship in dancing, and are moved to wild leapings and whirlings by the spirit of piety; others, again, who are devil-dancers, and worship the principal of evil in their demoniac gyrations. But assuredly, of all who ever danced upon this earth, one ever danced on the edge of a more terrible volcano than that which trembled and throbbed under the feet of these light-hearted revelers to-night—happy, unforeseeing, rejoicing in the balmy breath of summer, the starlit sky, the warmth and the flowers, with no thought that this fair Paris, whitely beautiful in the sheen of starlight and moonlight, was like a phantasmal or fairy city—a city of palaces which were soon to sink in dust and ashes, beauty that was to be changed for burning, while joy and love fled shrieking from a carnival of blood and fire.

Even to-night there were bystanders in the lamp-lit garden who shook their heads solemnly as they talked of the probability of war with Prussia. The battle of Sadowa had been the beginning of evil. France had played into the hands of her most dangerous rival, and had been swindled out of the price of her neutrality. To have allowed Austria to be crushed by Bismarck was worse than a crime, it was a blunder. And now all the signs and tokens of the time pointed to the likelihood of war. The day had come when the overweening ambition of the house of Brandenburg must be checked, and in the opinion of the Bonapartists the onus to fight was upon France. Opinion among the people was divided; and there were many who were friends of peace. A campaign would be a triumph for French arms, of course; but such triumphs, however certain, are never won without loss. For France as a people there must needs be profit and fame; but for individuals—well, even in a succession of victories some French blood must be shed, some French corpses must lie scattered on distant battle-fields—there must be cypress as well as laurel.

Yet the idea of impending war was not unpleasant. It electrified the intellectual atmosphere, set the hearts of men and women throbbing with new hopes, new fears. To elderly people it seemed only the other day that the army was coming home in triumph after the Italian War, and France was crowning the liberators of a sister land; but to the young people that Italian campaign seemed to have happened a long while ago. It was time that France should arise in her might and strike a great blow.

So the middle-aged folks, mere spectators of the evening's amusement, put their heads together and discussed the political situation—some arguing from one point of view, some from another; and those two waltzers circled faster and faster with the closing bars of the coda. With the last chord they stopped. The dark-haired young man withdrew his arm reluctantly from his partner's slim waist, and then they went off arm-in-arm towards the shadow of the trees—dark-haired youth and fair-haired youth, all the world to each other, and infinitely happy.

"Faust and Marguerite," said a corpulent citizen, who had been watching the dancers while he talked of Bismarck and the Duc de Gramont.

"Happily I see no Mephistopheles," replied his companion. "If the young people go to perdition it will be their own doing."

"The girl is very pretty," said the other, "and I think I have seen her lover's face before to-night."

"He is to be seen any day at the Cafe Malmus. He is a journalist—a sprig of nobility, I believe, but as poor as Job. He writes for the papers. He ranks as an esprit fort and something of a wit."

"And the girl—do you know who she is? She has hardly the air of a grisette."

"She is like Nilsson in Marguerite. No, I'll swear she is no grisette—nothing of the Mimi Pinson there, my friend. I never saw her till to-night. Look yonder, just emerging from the trees; do you see?"

"Is it Mephistopheles?"

"No, but the spirit of evil in a woman's shape—envy, hatred, revenge, all incarnate in a jealous woman. Great Heaven, such a face—see, see!"

His friend looked in the direction indicated. Yes; there, creeping from the covert of the trees, stealthily, serpent-like, stole forth a woman—young, handsome, smartly dressed, with a black silk gown, and a bonnet all roses and lace—a shopkeeper in holiday attire. The face was dark with hatred and malice, the eyes were bright with angry fires. Slowly, stealthily, the footsteps followed in the path the lovers had taken—following as the shadow follows the sun, as night follows day.

But now the band struck up a quadrille composed of the liveliest airs from the Princesse de Trebizonde, which had lately enchanted the boulevards; and then began those wild choric measures in which Parisian youth excels all other nations. The habitues of the garden—the clerks and the shopmen and the commercial travelers, industrial and intellectual youth of every grade—began their diversions, to the delight of the spectators. Legs were flung in the air, wild leapings and convulsive evolutions diversified the humdrum figures of the legitimate quadrille; each dancer tried to out-Herod his vis-a-vis. Now the right had it; anon, by a still wilder bound, the left triumphed; while the lookers-on laughed and applauded. But there was no offence in this outbreak of muscular activity and high spirits. Sunday dances at these gardens are sacred to the people. There is very little admixture of the demi-monde on a Sunday evening; the clerk and the counter-jumper, the little industries of Paris, have the field to themselves.

The journalist and his fair-haired sweetheart did not reappear in the quadrille. They were sauntering side by side in the shadowy walks, hearing the joyous music vaguely; for the lowest whisper of a lover's voice has more power on the listening ear of love than the loudest orchestra that ever crashed and jingled in the music of Orphee aux Enfers or the Grande Duchesse.

"Why should Rose deem me to wait?" pleaded the journalist, bending his dark ardent eyes on the fair sunset face beside him. "What does poverty matter, if we are true to each other and strong to conquer fortune, as we are, Kathleen? We can bear a few privations in the present, knowing that Fate will be kinder in the future. I have won a shred of reputation already, though I write for such a wretched rag of a paper that I can earn very little money; but fame will come and money will follow before we are ten years older. At my age Balzac was no richer than I am."

"I am not afraid of poverty," answered the girl gently. "Why should I fear what I have known all my life? Rose and I have always been poor; but we have always been happy; except once when she had the fever. Ah, that was heart-breaking! No money to pay a doctor, no money for wine or fruit or fuel, no money for the rent, and the deadly fear of being turned out of our lodging while she lay helpless and unconscious on her bed. No prospect but the hospital. Yes, those were dark days. I almost envied the rich."

"Almost envied, my angel? I am made of a different stuff, and I hate and envy them at all times. That hatred gives bitterness to my pen—rancor, acidity, all the qualities our Parisians love. It is my chief stock-in-trade. I could not live without it."

"Ah, you feel the sting of poverty more than I do, because you come of a race that was once rich, a family that was once noble."

"Yes; I come of a decayed race—worn out, effete, passed by in the press and hurry of a commercial age. That is why I hate the insolent voturier brood that have battened in the sunshine of imperial favor; the stock-jobbers and gamblers, corrupt to the core, and swelling with pride in their dirty gold. My grandfather was a gentleman and a soldier; he fought for his king till the last ray of hope had faded. And when his faithful little band of Chouans were scattered or slain, and he had escaped by the skin of his teeth from being shot down by the Blues, he shut himself up in the old stone tower of his chateau, and lived among peasants, as peasants live, and let his son and daughter run wild. My father was very little in advance of his father's farm-laborers in education or manners, when he entered the army, a lad of fifteen, soon after the restoration of the Bourbons. But he was one of the handsomest men of his day. He had good blood in his veins; and it seems somehow that race will tell, for twenty years later he was one of the finest soldiers in the French army. He married a rich wife, loved her passionately, spent all her money, ruined her life, and died broken-hearted and a pauper within a year of her death, leaving me to face the world, penniless, and with very few friends, at twelve years of age. The Empire was then in its golden dawn. One of my first memories is of the Coup d'Etat, that awful night of the second of December, when the bullets whistled along the Boulevard Poissonniere, like the hailstones in a summer storm, and the terrified wondering bourgeois were mown down like ears of corn. My father was at the head of his regiment that night; and my mother and I were looking down upon the scene from our apartment at a corner of the boulevard. Two years later I was an orphan."

"O, what a hard childhood and youth you must have had!" said Kathleen, full of pity.

"Not harder than yours, little one. You and the sister have not had too much of the sunshine of life, I take it."

"No; but we have always been together. We have faced the storm side by side; or perhaps I ought to say that Rose has faced it bravely by herself and sheltered me. But you have been quite alone—no brother, no sister."

"Not a creature of my own flesh and blood," answered Mortemar. "If it had not been for a bluff old brother-officer of my father's I must have starved, or been brought up on state charity. He got me a pension, just enough to pay my schooling in a humble way, from the Emperor, in consideration of my father's services on the second of December, but this allowance was to cease when I was eighteen. The influence of my father's old friend got me accepted at one of the finest schools near Paris, the school kept by the Dominican Fathers at Arcueil, where I was educated at a third of the pension paid for the other pupils, by the benevolence of the Prior, who pitied my desolate position. Here I remained till my eighteenth birthday; and I ought to be a better man than I am after the care and kindness those good monks lavished upon me. When I left school the good old friend was dead, and from that time I have had to live—somehow—by my own labor of head or hands. I believe it is considered the finest training for youth; but it is hard, and it hardens the heart and the mind of a man."

"Has it hardened your heart, Gaston?" asked the girl, drawing a little closer to him in the dim starlit avenue.

"To all the world—except to you."

And now, at a turn of the leafy path, they came suddenly face to face with another couple—a stalwart broad-shouldered man of about thirty, with a tall good-looking young woman upon his arm—at sight of whom Kathleen exclaimed lovingly,

"Rose, where have Philip ad nyou been hiding all the evening?"

"We have been looking on at the dancers, Kathleen," answered Rose; "and now I think it is time we all went home."

"So soon?" cried Kathleen.

"It has struck the three-quarters after ten. Did you see Madame Michel in her fine bonnet and gown?"

"What, Suzon Michel of the cremerie?" asked Mortemar. "Is she here to-night?"

"She is here every Sunday night, I believe, and at the theatre three times a week, said Rose's companion, Philip Durand, as devoted to the elder sister as Gaston Mortemar was the younger. "That little woman has a pleasant life of it. She has saved money in that snug little shop of hers."

"She is a vulgar coquette, and I hate the sight of her," said Rose sharply.

This was a very ill-natured speech for Rose, who was usually the soul of kindness.

"Pray what has the poor little Suzon done to offend you?" asked Gaston, laughing at Rose's impetuosity.

"It is not what she has done, but what she is. I hate bold bad women; and she is both bold and bad."

"This from you, Rose, who believe that the Gospel was something more than an epitome of the floating wisdom of the East! Have you forgotten the text, "Judge not, that ye be not judged?"

"When I think or speak of Suzon Michel I forget that I am a Christian," answered Rose gravely. "There is something venomous about that woman. I loathe her instinctively, as I loathe a snake. And now, Kathleen, we must really go home."

"One more round, just one more. Hark! there is the waltz from Le Grande Duchesse," pleaded Gaston; and, without waiting for permission, he drew his arm round Kathleen's waist, and led her into the circle in front of the flaring orchestra, under the summer stars.

CHAPTER II.

WAYSIDE FLOWERS.

The Rue Git le Cœur is not one of the fashionable streets of Paris. It does not belong to the English quarter, or the American quarter, or the Legitimist quarter, or the Diplomatic quarter; the quarter Art, or Learning, of Science, or the demi monde. Beauty and fashion never visit the spot. It has hardly a place on the map of Paris. And yet, like many another such streets, it is a little world in itself, and human beings are born and die in it, and passions pure and holy, and base and wicked, are nourished and fostered there; and comedies and tragedies are acted there, turn by turn, as the wedding feast is spread, or the funeral drapery hung out, black and limp and dismal, against the dingy door-posts.

Git le Cœur is a narrow shabby little street, hidden somewhere in the densely populated district between the Boulevard St. Michel and the Rue des Saints Peres. It is near the Quai des Augustins, which makes a pleasant promenade for its inhabitants on summer evenings, near the river, within sight of the mighty towers of Notre Dame, within sound of her deep-toned bells. It is near the Morgue, and not very far from the hospitals; near the flower-markets; near much that is central and busy, closely hemmed round with the teeming life of the workaday world of Paris; but very far from the haunts of pleasure, from the famous restaurants, from clubs and cafes, from parks and parterres, from opera-house and aristocratic hotel.

It is a narrow street—crooked too—and the houses are of the shabbiest. In one of these houses, a house which lay back from the street, and, with three others, formed a stony quadrangle, enclosing a little yard, dwelt Rose and Kathleen O'Hara, two sisters of Irish parentage, the daughters of a poor Irish gentleman, who had come here from the good city of Bruges in Flanders, just twelve years ago, and had occupied the same little apartment on the third story ever since. Just nineteen years ago Captain O'Hara was living with a young second wife and a seven-year-old daughter, the issue of his first marriage, in the city of Brussels. He had been in the army, in the 87th Irish Fusileers, had run through his little patrimony, and had sold his commission, and thrown himself almost penniless on the world, after the manner of many other gentlemen, English as well as Irish. Twice had he married in ten years, and twice for love. Nothing could have been more honorable or less prudent than either marriage; and now he was living from hand to mouth in furnished lodgings in Brussels, writing a little for the English newspapers, getting a little help now and then from his own family, and now and then a ten-pound note from a wealthy maiden aunt of his wife's—the aunt from whose handsome house in the Circus, Bath, pretty Kathleen Reilly had run away with her handsome Captain. The aunt had not forgiven or taken her back to favor; but she sent a little help occasionally, out of sheer charity, and always accompanied by a lecture which gave a flavor of bitterness to the boon.

Captain O'Hara and his wife were not unhappy, in spite of their precarious fortunes. It was summer, and the scent of the lime-blossom was in the air of the park and the boulevards; the lamplit streets and cafes were full of brightness and music in the balmy eventides of July. The young wife was looking forward tremblingly, yet hopefully, to the cares and joys of maternity. The dark-eyed stepdaughter adored her. Too young to remember her own mother, who had died in Bengal, where the girl was born, the child idolised the Captain's fair-haired wife, and was fondly loved by her in return. Never was there a happier family group than these three, and when the expected baby should come, it was to be a boy, the Captain declared in the pride of his heart; a son and heir—heir to empty pockets, wasted opportunities, bankruptcy, and gaol. He was pining for a son to perpetuate the noble race of O'Hara. The baby was to be christened Patrick, after some famous Patrick O'Hara of days gone by, the age of war and chivalry, and poetry and pride, when Ireland had not yet yielded her sweetness to the proud invader.

Alas for the unborn child on whom such hopes had been founded, such dreams had been dreamt! The fatal day of birth came, and the child was a girl; and before the wailing infant was six days old the young fair mother, with the rippling golden hair and innocent blue eyes, was lying in her coffin, strewn with white lilies and roses, and all the purest flowers of summer-tide. The brave young heart, which had never flinched or faltered at poverty or trouble, was stilled for ever. The wife who had been content to bear Fate's worst ills with the husband of her choice was gone to the shadowy home where his love could not follow her.

Captain O'Hara never looked the world or his difficulties bravely in the face after that day. He lived to see Kathleen a lovely girl of five years old, but he was a broken man from the day of his wife's death. He roamed from foreign town to town, living anywhere for convenience or cheapness. He spent six months at Brest, a year in Jersey, the two girls with him everywhere, nursed and cared for by Bridget Ryan, the faithful Irish maid-servant who had taken Rose from the arms of her Indian ayah, and had followed the Captain's fortunes ever since. He led a wretched out-at-elbows life, getting a little money by hook or by crook, and leaving a little train of debts behind him, like the trail of the serpent, in every town he left.

In Jersey, where cognac was conveniently cheap, the Captain took to drinking a good deal—not in dreadful drinking bouts, which would have frightened his poor children out of their senses, but in a gentle homœopathic sort of sottishness which kept his brain in a feeble state all day long, and gradually sapped his strength and his manhood. While the Captain was dawdling away his day—strolling down to the tavern or the club, lounging on the esplanade, gossipping with the guests and comers, meeting old acquaintance, and sometimes getting an invitation to dinner, with a cigarette always between his lips—the two children, of whom the elder was not eleven, and the younger only four, used to play together all day upon the golden sands in front of their shabby lodgings, while the Irish nurse gossipped with the landlady, or sat in the sun darning and patching the children's well-worn frocks or the Captain's decaying shirts.

The two girls were happy in those sunny summer days by the sea, in spite of their poor lodgings and scanty fare. Fruit was cheap, and flowers were abundant everywhere, and there was no stint of bread and butter, and milk and eggs. The children wanted nothing better. But it was a dismal change for them when their father carried them back to Belgium, and established them in a stony street in Bruges, where the peaked roofs of the opposite houses seemed to shut out the sun, and where, instead of the sweet odors of sea and seaweed, there was an everlasting stench of dried fish and sewage.

It was winter by this time, and it seemed to be the winter of their lives. Kathleen cried for the sea and the flowers of sunny Jersey. She could hardly be made to understand that summer was only a happy interval in the year, and that flowers do not grow in the stony streets of a city. The days in Bruges were cold and dismal, the evenings long and gloomy. If it had not been for Biddy Ryan the poor children might have pined to death in their solitude. Captain O'Hara was never at home in the evening, rarely at home in the afternoon, and he never left his bed till the carillon at the cathedral had played that lovely melody of Beethoven's, 'Hope told a flattering tale,' which the bells rang out every day at noontide. The Captain found the cafe indispensable to his comfort, the petit verre d'absinthe a necessity of his being, a game at dominoes or draughts the only distraction for the canker at his heart; thus the children, whom he loved fondly enough after his manner, were dependent on Biddy Ryan for happiness; and the faithful soul did her utmost to cheer and amuse them in their loneliness. She told them her fairy stories, the legends of her native Kerry; she described the green hills and purple mountains, the lakes, the glens and gorges, the islands and groves and abbeys, of that romantic country; until Rose, who had seen but little of the grandeur and glory of earth, longed with a passionate longing for that land of lake and mountain, which was in somewise her own land, inasmuch as her father had been born and bred within a few miles of Killarney.

SURVEYING PARTY.

I. Bick, Esq., Provincial Land Surveyor, accompanied by two other gentlemen, has been up surveying the site for new mills to be erected on Captain Bridgewater's property. The site is one of the very best, and the enterprise being undertaken by the right men it will be a paying investment as well as materially enhancing the value of the property. The new Government Road to Cardiff and the north runs close to the surveyed property.

ACCIDENT.

Capt. Bridgewater met with a bad accident on Wednesday last which may have proved serious had it not been for prompt and energetic action. The Captain was engaged in drawing marsh hay when, coming to a bad piece of road, the sleigh capsized, throwing him against a stump and dislocating the hip joint. He immediately forced the bone into its place, and, although confined to his bed, is doing well.

THAT CHRISTMAS TREE.

A pleasant time was anticipated by the youngsters connected with the Sunday School here, but Santa Claus' sleigh came to grief. It is perhaps as well it is so.

Pale, Poor, Puny and Pallid.

Considering all the ills that attack little children, it is a wonder that any of the poor little youngsters live to grow up.

There are children who are truly objects of pity. They seem almost bloodless. Their cheeks are thin and pinched; their eyes are hollow; and their skin is tightly drawn over their foreheads. There is nothing hearty about them. They do not enjoy their lives. They are suffering from the debility that leads to marasmus. Poor things!

Do a good deed for the pale, poor, puny, pallid child. Hand its mother a bottle of The Shaker Blood Syrup. Here is life even for the most delicate, the most debilitated; for the child almost given up for dead. Pure blood is what the child needs to bring it up. The little digestive apparatus will recover. The pale cheeks will fill out. The weary groan of the child will be exchanged for the merry prattle of infantile gladness. Your druggist will tell you what wonders The Shaker Blood Syrup has done for very sick children.

ENGLAND FIRM.

A special says the urgent order of the English Government to Portsmouth to hold all available men of the southern division of the Royal artillery in readiness to go to Gibraltar, is considered significant. It is regarded as a hint to the Continental powers that England will be prepared to defend her course in Egypt.

Very Remarkable Recovery.

Mr. Geo. V. Willing, of Manchester, Mich., writes: "My wife has been almost helpless for five years, so helpless that she could not turn over in bed alone. She used two Bottles of Electric Bitters, and is so much improved that she is able now to do her own work."

Electric Bitters will do that is claimed for them. Hundreds of testimonials attest their great curative powers. Only fifty cents a bottle at Taylor & McDonald's.

GORDON AND KHARTOUM.

The latest news from Khartoum says Gen. Gordon has captured a considerable quantity of grain by his steamers, and now frequently receives supplies from the villages along the eastern bank of the Nile. He is making his own powder, and the chances of his holding out until Lord Wolseley reaches him are very good.

Wheeler's Tissue Phosphates.

As a brain and nerve restorative the use of DR. WHEELER'S ELIXIR OF PHOSPHATES AND CALISAYA is founded on well-established physiological and chemical laws since it is composed of those elements in our food that contribute directly to the nutrition of the nervous ganglia—the batteries that generate nerve force. In nervous debility it is seventy per cent. greater value than Phosphorus pure, in pill or solution, or as Hypophosphites.

WHEAT PRICES.

A Minneapolis, Minn., despatch says the extremely low price of wheat has caused a falling off in receipts in the North-West of fully eighty per cent, compared with fifteen days ago. It is rumored that the big millers have got hold of nearly all the good hard wheat in Dakota and Red River Valley, and are holding it until spring.

Have You Thought About It?

Pain is one of the sure things of life, and it becomes then a most important question to have at hand the quickest and most efficient remedy. Polson's NERVILINE cannot fail to cure cramps, toothache, neuralgia, headache, and all pain, internal or external. Nerviline is the most perfect combination ever offered to the public for the relief of pain. It will not cost you much to try it, for you can buy at any drug store for ten cents a trial bottle, which will convince you of its mighty pain relieving power.

SIR JOHN'S DOUBLE.

The Mudir of Dongola has been gazetted a K. C. M. G., and a cablegram to the Mail says it has been suggested that Lord Wolseley on his return from Khartoum should bring the Mudir with him so that he may have the special honor of receiving his order from the Queen's own hands.

From England's

Distant shores comes additional testimony as to the wonderful merit of the only sure pop corn cure—Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. "Office of the Chemist and Druggist, 42 Cannon St., London, Eng. A friend travelling in the States and Canada used Putnam's Corn Extractor, and within a few days the corns vanished, and I now ask you to send me a few bottles. S. Brett." After referring the letter to our English Agent, we received intimation that Mr. Brett had ordered three dozen for distribution among his friends. See that you get the genuine Putnam's Corn Extractor. Beware of imitations and substitutes.

DAKOTA'S DELIGHTS.

Gophers have become such a nuisance in some parts of Dakota that the local authorities in many counties make a standing offer of five cents for every gopher's tail being used for currency. Shop-keppers ask for several tails' worth of calico: topers go into bar-rooms and throw down enough tails for a drink; and it is said that tails have even been put on the collection plate at religious meetings.

Twenty-Five Per Cent. Stronger than any Other Butter Color.

BURLINGTON, Vt., May 3rd, 1882.

I hereby certify that I have examined the Butter Color prepared by Wells, Richardson & Co., and that the same is free from alkali or any other substance injurious to health; that I have compared it with some of the best of the other Butter Colors in the market and find it to be more than twenty-five per cent. stronger in color than the best of the others.

I am satisfied that it is not liable to become rancid, or in any way to injure the butter. I have examined it after two months free exposure to the air in a place liable to large changes of temperature, and found no trace of rancidity, while other kinds similarly exposed became rancid. A. H. SABIN,
Prof. Chemistry, University of Vermont.

VICTORIA AND WILLIAM.

Correspondence with Queen Victoria by letter is one of the Prime Minister's regular and almost daily duties. When there has been an important division or debate in Parliament, and members are hastening home, tired, to bed, the Premier alone can take no rest until he has written to the Queen his official report of the proceedings. These letters are couched in the third person: "Mr. Gladstone presents his duty to her Majesty, etc.," and her Majesty's replies, usually dictated to a secretary, also run in the third person.

A robbery of between two and three thousand dollars from the cash box containing remittances from Grand Trunk stations between Stratford and Buffalo has been discovered, and a clerk in the office of the Stratford station agent has been arrested on suspicion.

Masonic Sermon.

Preached Sunday, Dec. 28th, 1884, by Rev. A. H. Munro, Baptist Minister, in commemoration of [the Festival of St. John the Evangelist.

Phil. iv. 8.—"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things."

The apostle Paul was the human leader in the greatest revolution of all time, a revolution that did not begin or end with himself; that of Christianizing the world. To Peter were given the keys to unlock the doors of the Kingdom of Christ, first to Jews and then to Gentiles; but we have no reason to believe that his personal labors ever extended very far from Palestine. It was Paul, and not Peter, that spread the Gospel among Greeks and Romans in Asia and Europe, and who gave to them that form of doctrine which the whole world is destined to receive as the Gospel of Christ. The progress of Christianity from the beginning

HAS BEEN REVOLUTIONARY.

"Think not," said the Saviour, "that I am come to send peace on earth. I came not to send peace but a sword." Yet not that sword of which He said, "For all who take the sword shall perish by the sword," but "The sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." And which has proved its efficiency in the victories it has won over ancient paganism and philosophy, and which it is winning over modern unbelief, worldliness and superstition.

A revolution may be destructive or constructive. It should be both. To the Greeks and Romans it must have seemed for a time as if Christianity were wholly destructive. They had many gods and goddesses.—Christianity declared that these idols were nothing. They had magnificent temples.—Christianity turned its back upon them and led the people from them. They had science.—Christianity said that it was falsely so called. They had systems of philosophy. Christianity pronounced them the mere words

THAT MAN'S WISDOM TEACHES.

They had numberless distinctions, ethnic, social and legal, between Romans, Greeks and barbarians, patricians and plebeians, bond and free, men and women, and Christianity declared that there was neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male nor female, but all were one in Christ. They pointed to their splendid and beautiful achievements in architecture and sculpture, poetry and oratory, and said, "What have you to compare with these?" And Christianity answered, "Truth you have not learned; sublimity you have not imagined; beauty of which you have not conceived; for 'Eye hath not seen, neither hath ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for them that love Him.'" Christianity will never lose its revolutionary character. It is in our world, as its author was, and as a wise general will sacrifice much that is in itself harmless or valuable, the noble forest, the garnered harvest, the peaceful home or the magnificent edifice, that he may take and destroy the fortress of the enemy, so Christianity will, for the sake of the great ends it has in view, ignore, or sacrifice much that in itself is not evil. Christianity is here to put down all wickedness and wrong, and whatever is linked with these must sever that connection or suffer.

TO DESTROY THE WORKS OF THE DEVIL.

But Christianity is also constructive.

Divinely inspired to see the import of Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the great image of gold, silver and brass, whose feet were partly of iron and partly of clay, Daniel looking down the vistas of time said, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Thus the ancient prophet foretold both the destructive and constructive nature of

THE KINGDOM OF CHRIST.

That kingdom to which he referred when he began to preach, Repent for the kingdom of heaven is at hand, and of the things pertaining to which he spake to His disciples in His final discourse before His ascension.

That kingdom is not composed of square miles of territory and armaments on land and sea, but of regenerated men and women, in whom and over whom Christ reigns, and who by His spirit are led to sanctify all things to Christ, and by whom this world is being redeemed from its iniquity for Christ. In doing this great work Christianity reconstructs human beings morally and spiritually. It proclaims to them the supreme importance of the life to come, declares that eternal destiny depends on character, and that no one can have the character essential to citizenship in God's kingdom unless by Divine grace he is led to accept Christ as his Saviour and King. And wherever does this will be anxious to know what Christ approves or forbids.

The ancient pagans, when they became Christians, must have been deeply interested in learning where Christianity, that had wiped out so many other lines of demarcation, drew its own. Upon what did it place its ban, and to what did it give its sanction? To this inquiry our text is the apostle Paul's inspired answer.

What does this by implication prohibit? Only the false, the dishonorable, the impure, the unlovely, the thing of evil repute, without blessing for man or praise for God.

WHAT DOES IT SANCTION

and commend? First, Truth. Christianity wants no concealments, no pious frauds, no restrictions upon research or discovery. Let the truth be found out and told. The truth of history as it explores the past and places every established fact beside the Divine records, for it only confirms their accuracy. The truth of science, whether it tell us how God has laid the foundations of the earth, or given worlds and laws to the universe, or assists us to trace the obscure tracks of human progress through the misty past, let the truth be learned and taught, for it will never weaken, but when really known will ever strengthen our faith in that word which liveth and abideth for ever.

The sanction of our text extends to whatever is worthy of the dignity and reverence of man, to whatever is righteous in principle or practice, to whatever is free from the taint or the tendency of evil, to whatever is beautiful in form or hue, in thought or expression, in its moral features or spiritual associations; to whatever breathes the spirit of love or illustrates the law of kindness; to whatever sheds a blessing on man or

LIFTS UP THE SOUL TO GOD.

Believe in these things, value them, cultivate them, promote them, cherish them, is the injunction of our text.

What claims has Freemasonry to be included in this category? What can its friends plead on its behalf and in defence of their regard for it?

1. Its Antiquity. It would not be easy to define exactly what Napoleon meant when he said to his army, just before the battle of the Pyramids, that 40 centuries were looking down upon them. But it thrilled the hearts of those soldiers with the thought that the battle they were about to fight would be linked with the history of 4,000 years.

There is a love of that which is ancient, and a veneration for it, very deeply rooted in the hearts of men. Every nation loves to trace its history back to the shadowy past, where fact and fable blend. To that distant era we must point for the origin of Freemasonry. None can tell with any certainty when or where it arose. That it existed in Europe in the Middle Ages there is documentary proof. That if it was not previously known to the Druids, it was brought to Britain by the Romans, is believed. And some think that Solomon himself was its founder, and that it came into existence with the first temple. When a thing is very old, and men are apt to have faith in it, and admiration for it, for in its very survival it has given proof that it has a right to live. Why has it lived so long but because it deserves to live? What an argument in its favor, that through all the changes of so many centuries, it has found sources of life and accessions of strength. All this Freemasonry may plead on its own behalf, and ask, is not the fact that an institution which no man is persuaded to join and any man is free to leave, has in all ages found so many staunch adherents, a proof that it contains much that is good to commend it to men's judgment and hearts?

2. Its Universality. Freemasonry knows no distinction of race or class. It does not ask concerning a candidate, What is the hue of his skin? the occupation he follows? or the creed that he professes. All that it cares to know is, whether or not he is a good man, true and trustworthy. And to-day there is no land or people, no creed or class, with which Freemasonry is not associated. It has spread all over Europe and America, and includes in its ranks the Mongols of Tartary, the yellow-skinned sons of Cathay, Hindoo Rajahs, and Parsee merchants. It is almost impossible not to feel respect for that which has evinced such and such far reaching attraction, and to believe that there must be in it much for the common good of men.

3 Fraternity. There are two very antagonistic feelings that are swaying the heads of human beings. The one is the selfish feeling that isolates, and the other the sympathetic one that draws and unites. In the midst of the proudest and most exclusive people that ever lived, the great Apostle of the Gentiles declared that God had "Made of one blood all nations to dwell on all the face of the earth." A declaration that science has slowly and finally accepted as true. We live in a day in which the intercourse between all nations is becoming so great and familiar that it is a question of deep and practical interest,—how are they to regard each other? Nor is the question of less interest in society, where class seems to be arraying itself against class, and the smouldering fires of socialism are being fed by the hostilities of labor and capital. How are men in every where to regard each other? Christianity says, as brethren, for we are all His offspring. Freemasonry says, we will make the practical recognition of that brotherhood not less to others, but more to those within our fraternity.

There is a sincere and wholesome pleasure in the sense of brotherhood thus created and expressed. It rises up no but it opens many a one that would otherwise be closed. Its power and resources have often been marvellously displayed. It has stayed the uplifted sword, and converted the foe into a friend. It has set the captive free and taken him from a prison to a palace, and it has stopped the religious persecutor in the very act of inflicting his vengeance.

4. Benevolence. Every one must be aware that in proportion as a pure Christianity, an open Bible and an intelligent faith in its truths, has been spread, Freemasonry has grown and flourished. To-day, the vast majority of Freemasons on this continent are members of evangelical congregations, and very many of them ministers of the gospel. There is but one explanation of this—that of which there is many another proof—that Christianity and Freemasonry

HAVE MUCH IN COMMON.

They both teach faith in God and a reverence for His word, and both declare that charity is the first of virtues and the noblest of graces. As the river Nile, flowing through the desert, spreads fertility along its banks, so Christianity, as it has flown on through the ages and spread over the world, has made the earth beautiful with the deeds of mercy, the enterprises of benevolence, and the institutions of philanthropy.

Freemasonry in this resembles Christianity,—whatever else it is, this institution is first of all benevolent. It turns the eyes of pity, and extends the open and full hand of help towards misery of every kind. The fact that it finds its special objects of charity within its own borders, gives the assurance that it but does not imply that its liberality is restricted within narrow bounds. True charity, if it begins at home, never ends there. The spirit of kindness when once created or excited, the pleasure of doing good when once experienced, will not submit to any restrictions but those which duty and necessity impose. Freemasons everywhere, while secretly doing much good of which the outside world knows nothing, are among the most generous contributors to all benevolent objects.

5. Perhaps I ought to enumerate as one of the things that endears Freemasonry to the members of the Order,—their knowledge of the falsity of the charges brought against it.

I have read and heard many discussions respecting the merits and demerits of Freemasonry, and several times have listened to able and learned men formulate most serious charges against the institution.

It has been said in this country that Freemasonry creates irreverence for Scripture, substitutes itself for Christianity, and makes itself superior to the obligations of justice and truth, creed and country. In Italy it has been charged with atheism and communism. All of which I, as a Freemason, declare to be

UTTERLY AND RIDICULOUSLY FALSE.

The self-respect of man, the virtue of woman, the claims of the family, the obligations of justice and patriotism, are not injured but made more sacred, imperative and safe by Freemasonry.

The worst that can be said in truth against the institution is that it is better than many who profess its principles. And if so, it is only answerable to the same charge that lies against all that has sinful, erring man for its exponent. Patriotism, one of the noblest of virtues, the favored theme of poets and orators, men have often made the mere politics of parties and schemes of politicians for place and power. Christianity is divine and perfect, but how often have men made it the hypocrite's mask and the persecutor's plea. And yet it is true that there is many a noble patriot, many a true Christian. So it is also true that there are many whose own personal characters and of Freemasonry. These men would not be where they are and what they are if this institution were not good and beneficial. To these we can appeal for witness that to pledge oneself to be a true Freemason is to engage to be a thoroughly good man in all the relations of life. No one can be all that his vows as a Mason demand without being what only God's word teaches and God's grace produces. This may we all be, and then as far as we are known and our influence is felt, the Order will need no other defence or praise. So mote it be.

TAKING STOCK!

No duty devolving upon the business man is so pertinent as that of Taking Stock. Books have been called the merchant's repeating clock, to tell him how he goes on. By "Taking Stock" and a comparison with his books, the trader is enabled to arrive at a reasonable computation of the business done during the year, and to tell whether the balance on the pages of his ledger shall be for or against him. It is not only the recognized duty of the active tradesman to "take stock" of his goods, his trade, his custom, but of his competitors.

Just now it is the manifest duty of our citizens to "take stock" of our newly elected Town Councillors to see what are the indications as to the filling in of Spaulding's Bay.

The universal application of the rule is shown in the particularity with which young ladies 'take stock' of prospective matrimonial chances.

In short—tradition, business usage, custom, convenience, and other good and sufficient reasons all corroborate the advisability of "Taking Stock."

This is the month we "take stock," and the balance of our WINTER GOODS will now be cleared out AT COST.

THE MIDDLE STATE.

"Theodore" Reviews "Laicus."

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

SIR,—To continue the review of "Laicus" I beg the reader's attention to his letter of the 11th December. In it he makes two or three admissions which confirm my position and fairly decide the case against himself. Taking the printer's division, at the end of paragraph one, the Jews are admitted to be the "Depositories of the Divine mysteries." This is in perfect harmony with Paul's testimony, (Rom. iii., 2, where he says, "to them (the Jews) were committed the oracles of God." Now these Divinely appointed guardians of God's Word—the Old Testament Scriptures—faithful to their charge—would not, and still refuse to receive the Apocrypha as God's Word. And till Rome shows that by Divine appointment she has the right to supercede the Jews in their charge, it is, on her part, an act of treason against God—a which was never intended to be hers, and which marks her as the "Lawless one," to attempt to put into the canon what the Divinely appointed custodians refuse to receive. The raising of Apocrypha to the status of Scripture is an unwarrantable human interference with the Divine arrangement.

In paragraph three, "Laicus" admits the validity, and for all Roman Catholics the binding character of my second test—"that the unanimous consent of the fathers is necessary to all interpretation of Scripture, and that everyone joining the Romish communion must accept it as the standard rule and guide of his belief. Yet notwithstanding this, while professing to deal with Scripture proofs in support of purgatory, he has not, in one single instance, attempted to show that that "unanimous consent" has been gained, so that the conclusion arrived at in my letter of the 4th December is left untouched, namely, that "purgatory is a baseless fabrication—a huge imposture—having no support from Scripture, and no legitimate connection with the Christian church."

In paragraph four, and at the top of the second column, we meet these words, "Questions which the church has decided, once and for all time, a Catholic is obligated to accept without hesitation or reservation. Otherwise his liberty of judging is unrestricted." Just so.

AN INFALLIBLE CHURCH

pronounces only once, and every Roman Catholic is deprived of his power of judging, and must throw himself, a slave, a mere machine, into the bands of his superiors. That, I admit, is good Roman Catholic doctrine. But let us see how it bears on the position of Laicus. Trent declared once and for all time that the Apocrypha is canonical. If this had been declared before would Trent have interfered? Impossible for an infallible church. But "Laicus" has told us over and over again that it was done five or six times over long before Trent—by the Councils of Hyppo, Carthage, Trullo and Florence—that "schismatic synagogue"—and confirmed by Popes Innocent, Gelasius and Eugenius, whom the Council of Basle excommunicated as a "perjured man, and an obstinate heretic." Now which are we to believe, "Laicus" or Trent. I fear we must decide for Trent, and tell "Laicus" that he has no right to have any opinion in the matter. His church has infallibly and notwithstanding his zeal, all his eloquence has been wasted, and his high-sounding trash and humbug must go to the "Index Expurg." and himself to penance, unless, forsooth, he has had the caution to procure a fifty days' indulgence beforehand.

While speaking of Trent I may as well finally dispose of it. Twice already I have stated that the number of members at the fourth session of that Council, when the Apocrypha was canonized, was fifty-three. "Laicus" seems annoyed at this, and has paraded himself in a way that might lead some to believe that he had caught me making an egregious blunder. He will have it that there were upwards of two hundred present at that council, but he suppresses the fact that he is speaking of the closing sessions, whereas I spoke only of the fourth.

The council lasted 18 years, and two sessions of a council 18 years apart, are surely two very different things. Notwithstanding that Rome had been raising heaven and earth to make the council a success, and doing all the whipping up and bribery practicable, yet there were only 253 members at the closing sessions; but that does not alter the fact that there were only 53 at its fourth session 18 years before. And it does not alter the fact that, that caucus of 53—most of them in the pay of the Pope, and bound to obey him—drunk with infatuation, solemnly assumed the right and power to and cursed all who dare oppose them or think otherwise.

Whether the thing was only a joke, or done in earnest, any one can see that it would be a parody on language to call that clique a General Council. It did not represent the one hundredth part of christendom. France rejected the greater part of its decrees, so did Spain, Flanders, Naples, and part of Ireland, and virtually it was null in Germany also, so that test three applied to this forlorn hope makes it vanish with the rest, and Rome, according to her own principles, has no right to force the creed of Pope Pius IV on any one, and no legitimate right to expect any one in her whole communion to honor it. My statement holds good then, and it is beyond the power of Laicus to upturn it.

I now pass to the letter of the 18th of December, and find it to be a very humdrum mixture of assumption and pitiful "begging the question." It purports to be an answer to mine of the 11th, which showed to a demonstration that the fact of prayer for the dead does not, in any case, imply purgatory. But Laicus won't be refused, he will have it that prayer for the dead does imply purgatory and he returns to the half crazy heretic, Tertullian, and keeps harping ad nauseam on that one string. Evidently this is the very best he can do—but his best is still 200 years away from Christ and his apostles—a gap that any day, and wide enough to make any man of common sense, and who was at liberty to use his own judgment, see the utter hopelessness of ever being able to throw back the pagan superstitious of "prayer for the dead," and purgatory into the Christian church during apostolic times, so as to give them a show of being built on the foundation of the Gospel.

My argument from the ancient Liturgies, collected by Renaudot, it seems, is too crushing for Laicus' patience, and he tries to relieve the pain and pressure of an expiring hope thus, (paragraph seven); "were prayers composed and offered up for the martyrs and the mother of Christ? Never! The statement is unqualifiedly false." There is some energy there, but it cannot alter the fact. Renaudot's work is too well known to be blotted out of existence by the pious cursing of Laicus, and if he will take the trouble to consult it, Collectio I, 26, 33, 34, 41, 42, Paris, 1716, he may find cause to alter his opinion, become a wiser man, and the more moderate in his language next time he approaches the subject.

In his next paragraph Laicus

and uses a good deal of trumpeting on the merits of that "most honorable" but self-contradictory father. But the quotation given in my letter of the 11th, and found in italics in the fifth paragraph, shows that Augustine was not a settled believer in purgatory. The reference is taken from Ad. Hesych 2,743, and Hypog v. 5, p. 40.

And if Laicus will consult further Augustine's opinion on Matt. xii. 31, 32, and note that he agrees with Mark and Luke, and declares that there is no forgiveness in eternity, and then compare with his own quotation, he will not ask again whether Augustine can contradict himself. No writer of credit has done so more frequently, and certainly no man has written more "Recantations."

His testimony is often so contradictory that it is not worth the paper it is written on. It shows this, however, that in his time the air was full of superstition, and certainly no fixed opinion about purgatory existed. That abode was to Augustine

A MERE CONJECTURE.

Here is one of his statements on the subject: "It is not incredible that some such thing may take place even after this life, and it may either be found or hid from us, viz.: that certain of the faithful, passing through a certain purgatorial fire, are sooner or later saved in proportion as they have more or less loved perishing things."—Enchiridion to Laurun, c. lxix, tom. vi, p. 222. Is it conceivable that Augustine could write in that way about a defined and accepted doctrine of his church? Plainly there had been no conclusion arrived at on the subject. It was a bare conjecture and no article of faith at the time. So that my former conclusion still holds good—the purgatory of Rome cannot be pushed nearer to New Testament times than the days of Augustine, and I repeat it, he was the first who hinted at the cleansing of the soul while the body lay in the grave, and neither Laicus nor anybody else for his sake can show the contrary.

The purgatory before this time was that of Origen, already described, which has not yet opened, and won't come into use till after the resurrection, and will be, in fact, the general conflagration at the end of the world.

THEODORE.

[It is obviously impossible, consistently with fair play, that a controversy should close simultaneously, when one disputant has one letter ahead of the other. Therefore to give "Theodore" letter for letter with "Laicus," we are bound in fairness to give the former a chance to reply to the letter of "Laicus" that appears in this issue.—ED EXAMINER.]

A PROTESTANT CERTIFICATE FOR THE REV. MR. FATHER CHINIQUY.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

SIR,—In the interests of fair play, and according to the olden maxim of "what's good for the goose is good for the gander," you are requested to publish the following testimonial of the Rev. Mr. Dixon, a Protestant clergyman at Bothwell. Its subject is the gentleman who regards Protestants as money-grubbers, who was expelled from the Catholic priesthood, who was suspended by the Chicago Presbytery, and who, as he himself states, came near being destroyed by his own—that is, if they are anxious to own him—Protestant brethren. Mr. D's article appeared in a recent issue of the London Advertiser, immediately after Chiniquy's lecture in the latter place. He falls foul of the saintly martyr and evangelist, in form and manner, to wit:—"If he (Chiniquy) uses no better arguments than this and kindred ones to induce them (the Catholics) to change their religion, I cannot see that either the Presbyterian or Roman Catholic church is a gainer on one hand or a loser on the other. You may take this as an infallible maxim, that the man who can be bullied out of one religion can be bullied out of the next, and is scarcely worth powder and shot. I never knew a man worth calling a man, who could be induced to change his religion by such means as Rev. Father Chiniquy uniformly employs—and the EFFECT of his HARANGUES must infallibly be to strengthen and deepen and broaden and consolidate the opposition of all Roman Catholics who have one grain of manhood. (Such for a certainty is the "effect" on the Catholics of Peterboro.) A man might think it necessary, under very exceptional circumstances, to disown his mother, but certainly he wouldn't take pains to advertise it to the world, and industriously heap obloquy upon her who had given him birth, and nourished and cherished him through his years of infancy. You may take it as a pretty safe rule, the rough old two-edged proverb, "It's a dirty bird that fouls its own nest," and I must say that the man who leaves a church, and then goes about the country making a living by abusing that church, isn't just exactly the sort of a man that I would care to lean my whole weight upon. About such a man there always seems to be something, to say the least, doubtful." Rev. Mr. Dixon has but voiced the genuine sentiments of thousands of fair minded Protestants, who would be justly indignant if some reprobate Protestant minister were, in turn, to employ such infamous tactics against them; and who, in company with every individual Catholic, would regard such a creature as an abortion to be abhorred of humanity. Respectfully, are at a critical period when they are about maturing and developing into women. The lack of watchful care at this time may result in fixing irregularities upon delicate organs and entailing a long list of "female weaknesses." THE MIDDLE STATE.

FAIR PLAY.

"Laicus" Reviews "Theodore."

To The Editor of THE EXAMINER:

On the 29th of November, in the year 1884, appeared in THE EXAMINER our original letter, "having for its object the re-affirmation, the re-exposition of the doctrine of the middle state," and neither calculated nor intended to provoke a controversy; yet, scarcely had it seen the light of day, when our polemical sensationalist swooped down upon it in true Quixotic style. And why, but that—since the question of gratuitous appearance is eliminated in his regard—the poor benighted public piteously besought him to hasten to its aid, and scatter to the four winds of heaven every jot and title of his adversary's argument! Already he has judged the case and proclaimed a a brilliant victory. And, on this score, his self-satisfaction is supreme and unquestionably "unanimous." To be sure, he didn't consult the public as to a decision of the cause; why should he? Public be hanged! Didn't it confess its ignorance when inviting him to enlighten it? and shall he now stultify himself by stooping to ask the opinion of this body in respect of his conduct? Not whilst he is an accredited champion.

Agreeable to promise we will now examine the "can-discover-nothing issue" propounded by our astute opponent as a of the whole business; and, perhaps, we may be able to discover something for him. All along it has been his custom, at regularly recurring intervals, to relieve himself of mawkish logic, and then, as soon as he had leisure to view attentively his crazy production, being heartily ashamed of himself, to attempt to foist the foolish and ungainly thing upon us; it has been his design and practice to hatch out crazy puzzles, perfectly bewildering and incomprehensible to himself; to concoct pet "issues," and then straightway challenge us to explain and make sense out of them. And, too, "any evasion" of the same would "at once be interpreted as a failure, and proclaimed accordingly." Surprising it is that he has not required us, ere this, to establish perpetual motion or to encompass the quadrature of the circle, barring which, advocate and middle state might be eternally relegated to realms unmentionable But we have not hesitated, at any time, to accept his "conditions," and expose either their want of truth, sense or relevancy to the subject in question. With respect to this particular "issue," let him fitly judge it in his own words: he "confusedly refers to" six several passages "of Scripture, takes a word or two out of each as it suits him, jumbles the whole together, leaves his readers to believe that his proof is as incontrovertible as infallibity itself," and "leaves us to admire his agility." He says, "I read in God's Word," etc., quotes his texts, giving, as usual, no books, chapter, verse, or page," (see tail end of letter in article of December 18th), and from them concludes that, at death, the soul of man goes immediately to heaven or to hell. He reads, etc. Good and commendable in him thus far. But to understand and profit thereby is quite another thing and, perhaps, equally as important. Jerome will tell him (T. i. ep. 49) "how difficult it is to understand the divine (mark the work divine) Scripture." Hilary brings to his notice those "who plead Scripture, without the mind of Scripture; for Scripture is not in reading but in comprehending." St. Peter is at pains to inform him (2 Pet., iii., 16) that in the epistles of St. Paul there are many things hard to be understood, which the unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other Scriptures, to their own perdition. What else gives rise to so many heresies, observes the "most honorable" Augustine, save that the Scripture which is good in itself is ill understood? Here a

GOOD AND SUFFICIENT REASON

is supplied for his "can-discover-nothing" perplexity. But, taking his "issue" on its merits, it shows only and simply that the good are destined for heaven, the bad doomed to hell. To the neither very good nor very bad it applies not at all. Evidently he intended to express that the idea of a middle state was a derogation of God's mercy on the one hand or of His justice on the other; but whether from design or because of inability resulting from his own mystification, he did not say as much. Now God will render to every man according to his works, Will He, then, as Origen aptly puts the case, punish one for his faults and not reward him for his virtues? If one, at death, have a little evil in him and more that's good, will God ignore the good and punish one with hell fire? Granted, that the wages of sin is death; but the sin that begetteth death is not slight sin, but a sin completed. (James i. 15.) Again, we are taught that man must render (Matt. xii., 36) an account for every idle word, and that nothing defiled (Apoc. xxi., 27) can enter into heaven. And is not man prone to evil (Gen. viii., 21) from his youth? Was he not (Ps. i., 7) conceived in iniquity? Have not (Rom. iii., 23) all men sinned? And is not every man a liar according to St. Paul, that says he is without sin? Does man (Eccles. c. ix., 1-12) know whether he be worthy of love or hatred, or his own end, or the uncertain things of time to come?

IN THE FACE OF THIS TESTIMONY

who has the assurance to affirm that he will die undefiled and possessing unspotted sanctity, so that he may go certainly and directly to the kingdom of heaven? Yet one dying with slight stains of sin, our terrific doctor will not permit to tarry for a time in a middle state, to the end that he may after attain heaven, but consigns him irrevocably and eternally to hell fire. Such is his conception of enlightened Christian charity, and he is welcome to and worthy of it. According to his teaching but few, indeed, will be chosen to enjoy the company of the elect; the great majority of the human family will be forever damned. But there is a God of charity (1 Epistle St. John, iv., 8.) whose mercy (Ecclus, xviii. 12) is upon all flesh. Where there is a little mixture of evil in ones life of good works, for that evil, God, in justice, cannot and will not punish one eternally. But is it an abuse of God's mercy to chastise minor offences in a middle state? Is it not the right and privilege of the Creator to define the conditions which shall be essential to the salvation of the creature? Is not baptism one of those conditions? But suppose one neglect it, and is called to meet his Judge. Will he plead by way of justification that the condition is in derogation of God's mercy? But faith alone will not suffice. One

MUST KEEP THE COMMANDMENTS,

(John xiv, 15); null and void is faith in the absence of good works (James ii, 26); one must avoid evil and do good (Pet. 1, 3), love God and his neighbor (Luke x), observe the golden rule (Luke vi, 31), love, pray for and do good to his enemies (Matt. v), and is even admonished to work out his salvation in fear and trembling (Philip. ii. 12). One has something more to do than simply believe, fold his arms and ease and excreate himself at leisure, minus care or cross or trial. A do-nothing, suffer-nothing policy will not purchase that heaven for him, which is only to be obtained by Christian violence against pride and concupiscence (Matt. xi. 12.) Obviously if one does not fulfill the law he must take the consequence and pay the penalty. But God is a merciful father and not a rigorous tyrant. If one die slightly defiled, it is just and reasonable and necessary that he be purified for a while in the state intermediate ere heaven is his joyful portion. In this there is no abuse, but a right and sensible use of God's mercy. In all charity we warn our athletic champion to take heed (Luke xi, 35), lest the light which is in him be not darkness; and, such as it has proved to be, it were wiser to have hidden it, long since, safe and securely under the historic bushel.

A few words now on the canon and Machabees. The reader will doubtless remember that a bare allusion to the canonicalness of Machabees was made in our first letter; and was not insisted upon, which fact was again stated in our second letter. Neither have we, at any time, claimed that Carthage was a general council, but that it put forth at an early day the exact canon afterwards promulgated by the general council of Trent. The point involved is whether or not the Jews, God's former chosen people, prayed for the repose and relief of the faithful departed—that is, those not dying at mortal enmity with God. The Jews did not believe, and no intelligent person holds, that any one dying is absolutely certain of going direct to heaven. Hence, many were, and are prayed for, to whom prayers are unavailable, either because, in lieu of a middle state, they may be at the time citizens of hell or heaven. But alms, prayer and sacrifice are offered up in behalf of the deceased on the supposition that they may be in a middle state. And if they are not there, in fact, it is well understood that these good offices do not apply to them. Now then, using Machabees as authentic history, it proves that the Jews did pray for the dead. Josephus also affirms it, and the Jews of today say the same thing. There is not a doubt as to the truth and reality of this custom. But because our champion has little confidence in his own cause, he addresses his best energies in order that he may not be compelled to retire in disgrace from the conflict. And lest his readers might discover the deception practised upon them, the better to cloak his dishonest design, he hastens to charge us with his own craft and mystification—an infallible practice with deceivers and false prophets. Let us glance at the "premises" which he employed to disprove the canonicalness of Machabees. In our second letter we demonstrated that his proof and conclusion were false and illogical; and in our third letter his unreason and duplicity was made patent and manifest. The gentleman comes forth as an erudite expounder of Catholic doctrine, about which he is as little conversant as the "man in the moon." It may be taken as a pretty safe rule that a man who is overmuch meddlesome with the affairs of his neighbors, neglects, or suffers to go by default, the very interests which most concern him. If the knowledge which our polemic possesses of his own theology be measured by the unlearning which he has exhibited in respect of Catholic theology, he is indeed to be pitied. But if his premises did not suffice for his purpose in the first instance, what becomes of them after he has gone on and ingrafted into them the "unmitigated bosh" of which we showed him to be the fruitful parent? He has now added to the burden which, at first was decidedly too weighty for him. His premise No. 1, however, and probably to his own consternation, turned out to be correct.

BUT A BOY IN HIS A. B. ABS would have put it to better use than he did. In his second effort to mount his illogical stilts and rectify his "groundless nonsense," he is equally unhappy. No. 1 is termed his major premise, No. 2 his minor premise; but he gives no name to premise No. 3, which he, doubtless regarded as a conclusion. Thus he has his conclusion embodied in his premises and, hence, has proved his case before he has fairly begun, or essayed a development of the argument. No wonder he affects to despise the ancients when he can handle logic after this summary and expeditious method. He still insists that Judas, the venerable high-priest of the Jews, was praying for souls in hell, and hence, treats him as an idiot. We submitted that Judas acted on the supposition that some, at least, of his deceased brethren might have repented their crime ere life was wholly extinct; that Judas knew the facts and circumstances of the case—even if he was not a doctor of logic—better than does our champion; that albeit they all might have been condmned, Judas still hoped that better fortune might await them. Our wily adversary carefully avoids these arguments, because reasonable and conclusive. Likewise does he avoid the evidence of Josephus in the regard of the custom in question. He picks up premise No. 2—a partial extract only from the Catholic rule of interpretation—and puts the "test" of "unanimous consent" to any verse of Scripture that suits him. So that if all the fathers do not concur in the interpretation of any one passage of the bible, then would he have the theory of unanimous consent exploded. Was there ever

ANYTHING MORE ABSURD AND IMPOSSIBLE?

Will he not understand that "unanimous consent" is moral, not absolute; that it applicable alone to doctrine and not to each several verse of Scripture? Does he still insist upon expounding and legislating for the universal Catholic world? Moreover, has he forgotten our statement that the "unanimous consent" of the fathers is concurrent with and subservient to the authority of the Church; that it obtains in respect of a middle state, and that this principle of interpretation is substantially as laid down by Irenæus, also Tertullian, in the second century? Again, in his premise No. 3 it was shown that he knew not the office and province of a general council. He would condemn everything—which, of course, includes himself—not expressly defined by a general council. Let him, if he likes; but the Catholic Church will hardly adjust its policy and code of laws to coincide and harmonize with his new-fangled theology. What a general council, properly approved, pronounces as of faith, is binding upon all Catholics. Lesser councils have not such authority in any case; yet neither because they may pass upon questions not definitely declared as of faith, are their acts and proceedings to count for naught, or to be condemned. A minor council may give truthful evidence of prevailing belief in the church respecting articles not absolutely to be held as of faith and, even then, there may be many reasons why the head of the church should not confirm the acts of the council. Take Carthage, for instance: in relation to Machabees, it undoubtedly reflected the belief of the church, which is the one point to be determined. Its acts, even if approved by the supreme executive, are yet not to be held as of faith. And in the whole history of the church it cannot be shown that any Roman pontiff refused to approve the transactions of any council, on account of a canonical declaration in behalf of Machabees. Hence, it is manifest that all his castle building on his three pet premises counts for nothing, and with it falls to mother earth, unhonored and unwept, the greater portion of his arguments addressed against the middle state.

A choice lot of more recent nondescript vagaries on the canon and Machabees remain to be considered. But the limits of this article, very much to our regret, necessitates a delay. Our expert "forger" is not the first of that race, who

Without the curse of knowing right from wrong,
Always appear decisive, clear and strong.
Where others toil with philosophic force,
Their nimble nonsense takes a shorter course,
Flings at your head conviction in a lump,
And gains remote conclusions at a jump.

Discourse by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage.

From Dungeon to Palace.

"And Pharaoh said unto Joseph, see, I have set thee over all the land of Egypt."—Genesis xli., 41.

Out of the green grass of the far South, I step into the snowbanks of this morning. From where the theremometer was at seventy, and we plucked the roses out of the open gardens, into this climate which now hovers about zero, what a contrast! And yet not more of a contrast than in the life of the hero of my text. Now down, now up. A change of seventy degrees in one day. Aye, in one hour. You cannot keep a good man down. God has decreed for him a certain point of elevation. He will bring him to that though it cost him a thousand worlds. You sometimes find men fearful they will not be properly appreciated. Every man comes to be valued at just what he is worth. You cannot write him up, and you cannot write him down. These facts are powerfully illustrated in my subject. It would be an insult to suppose that you were not all familiar with the life of Joseph. How his jealous brother threw him into a pit, but seeing a caravan of Arabian merchants trudging along on their camels, with spices and gums that loaded the air with aroma, sold their brother to these merchants, who carried him down into Egypt; Joseph there sold to Potiphar, a man of influence and office. How by Joseph's integrity he raised himself to high position in the realm, until under the false charge of a vile wretch he was hurled into the penitentiary. How in prison he commanded respect and confidence. How by the interpretation of Pharaoh's dream he was freed and became the chief man in the realm, the Bismarck of his country. How in the time of famine Joseph had the control of a magnificent storehouse which he had filled during seven years of plenty. How when his brothers, who had thrown him into the pit and sold him into captivity, applied for corn, he sent them home with the beasts of burden borne down under the heft of the corn sacks. How the sin against their brother which had so long been hidden came out at last, and was returned by that brother's forgiveness and kindness—the only revenge he took.

You see in the first place, that the world is compelled to honor Christian character. Potiphar was only a man of the world, yet Joseph rose in his estimation until all the affairs of that great house were committed to his charge. From his servant no honor or confidence was withheld. When Joseph was in prison he soon won the heart of the keeper, and though placed there for being a scoundrel, he soon convinced the jailer that he was an innocent and trustworthy man, and released from close confinement he became general superintendent of prison affairs. Wherever Joseph was placed, whether a servant in the house of Potiphar, or a prisoner in the penitentiary, he became the first man everywhere, and is an illustration of the truth I lay down, that the world is compelled to honor Christian character. There are those who affect to despise a religious life. They speak of it as a system of phlebotomy by which the man is bled of all his courage and nobility. They say he has bemeaned himself. They pretend to have no more confidence in him since his conversion than before his conversion. But all this is hypocrisy. There is a great deal of hypocrisy in the church and there is a great deal of hypocrisy outside the church. It is impossible for any man not to admire and confide in a man who shows that he has really become a child of God, and is what he professes to be. You cannot despise a son of the Lord God Almighty. Of course we have no admiration for the sham of religion. I was at Little Rock, Arkansas, a few days ago, a few hours after the ruffins had gone into the rail train and demanded that the passengers show arms, and then those ruffians took the pocket-books; and Satan comes up and suggests to a man that he throw up his arms in hypocritical prayer and hypocritical pretension, and then steals his soul. For the mere pretension of religion we have abhorrence. Redwald, the King, after his baptism, had an altar of Christian sacrifice and an altar for sacrifice to devils; and there are many men now attempting the same thing—half a heart for God and half a heart for the world—and it is a dead failure and it is a caricature of religion, and the only successful assault ever made on Christianity is the inconsistency of its professors. You may have contempt for pretension to religion, but when you behold the excellency of Jesus Christ come out in the life of one of His disciples, all that there is good and noble in your soul rises up into admiration, and you cannot help it. Though that man be as far beneath you in estate as the Egyptian slave of whom we are discoursing, was beneath his rulers, by an irrevocable law of your nature, Potiphar and Pharaoh will always esteem Joseph. When Rodoria, the Empress, threatened Chrysostom with death, he made the reply: "Tell the Empress I fear nothing but sin." Such a scene as that compels the admiration of the world. There was something in Agrippa and Felix which demanded their respect for Paul, the rebel against government. I doubt not they would willingly have yielded their office and dignity for a thousandth part of that true heroism which beamed in the eye and beat in the heart of that unconquerable apostle. Paul did not cower before Felix; Felix cowered before Paul. The infidel and worldling are compelled to honor in their hearts, although they may not eulogize with their lips a Christian firm in prosecution, cheerful in poverty, trustful in losses, triumphant in death. I find Christian men in all professions and occupations, and I find them respected and honored and successful. John Frederick Oberlin alleviating ignorance and distress: Howard, passing from dungeon to lazaretto with healing for the body and the soul; Elizabeth Fry, going to the penitentiary of Newgate prison to shake its obduracy as the angel came to the prison at Philippi, driving open the door and snapping loose the chain, as well as the lives of thousands of followers of Jesus, who have devoted themselves to the temporal and spiritual welfare of the race, are monuments of Christian religion that shall not crumble while the world lasts. A man said to me in the cars, "What is religion? Judging from the character of many professors of religion I do not admire religion." I said: "Now suppose we went to an artist in the city of Rome, and while in his gallery asked him, "what is the art of painting?" Would he take us out in a low alley and show us a mere dash of a pretender at painting? or would he take us down into the corridors and show us the Rubens, and the Raphaels, and the Michael Angelos? When we asked him, "what is the art of painting?" he would point to the work of those great masters, and say, "that is painting." Now, you propose to find the mere caricature of religion, to seek after that which is the mere pretension of a holy life, and you call that religion. I point you to the splendid men and women whom this Gospel has blessed and lifted and crowned. Look at the masterpiece of Divine grace if you want to know what religion is."

We learn also from this story of Joseph that the result of persecution is elevation. Had it not been for his being sold into Egyptian bondage by his malicious brothers, and his false imprisonment, Joseph never would have become Governor. Everybody excepts the promise, "Blessed are they that are prosecuted for righteousness sake, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven," but they do not realize the fact that this principle applies to worldly as well as spiritual success. It is true in all departments. Men rise to high official positions through misrepresentation. Public abuse is all that some of our public men have had to rely upon for their elevation. It has brought to them what talent and executive force could not have achieved. Many of those who are making great effort for place and power will never succeed, just because they are not of enough importance to abuse. It is the nature of men—that is of all generous and reasonable men—to gather about those who are persecuted, and defend them, and they are apt to forget the fault of those who are the subjects of attack while attempting to drive back the slanders. Prosecution is elevation. Helen Stirk, the Scotch martyr, standing with her husband at the place of execution, said: "Husband let us rejoice to-day; we have lived together a great many happy years; this is the happiest time of all our life: you see we are to be happy together forever. Be brave now; be brave. I will not say "good night" to you, for we shall soon be in the kingdom of our Father together." Persecution shows the heroes and the heroines. I go into another department and I find that those great denominations of Christians which have been most abused have spread the most rapidly. No good man was ever more violently maltreated than John Wesley—belied and caricatured and slandered until one day he stood in a pulpit in London, and a man arose in the audience and said, "You were drunk last night," and John Wesley said: "Thank God, the whole catalogue is now complete. I have been charged with everything but that!" His followers were hooted at and maligned and called by every detestable name that infernal ingenuity could invent, but the hotter the persecution the more rapidly they spread, until you know what a great host they have become and what a tremendous force for God and the truth they are wielding all the world over. I do not wonder they celebrate the centennial in Baltimore. It was persecution that gave Scotland Presbyterianism. It was persecution that gave our land first to civil liberty and afterwards to religious freedom. Yea, I might go further back and say it was persecution that gave the world the great salvation of the gospel. The ribald mockery, the hungering and thirsting, the unjust charge, the ignominious death, when all the force of hell's fury was hurled against the cross, was the introduction of that religion which is yet to be the earth's deliverance and our eternal salvation. The state sometimes said to the church, "come, take my hand and I will help you." What was the result? The church went back and it lost its estate of holiness, and it became ineffective. At other times the state said to the church, "I will crush you." What has been the result? After the storms have spent their fury, the church so far from having lost any of its force, has increased and is worth infinitely more after the assault than before. Read all history and you will find that true. The church is far more indebted to the opposition of civil government than to its approval. The fires of the stake have only been the torches which Christ held in His hand, by the light of which the church has marched to her present glorious position. In the sound of racks and implements of torture I hear the rumbling of the gospel chariot. The scaffolds of martyrdom have been the stairs by which the church mounted.

Learn also from our subject that sins will come to exposure. Long, long ago had those brothers sold Joseph into Egypt. They had made the old father believe that his favorite child was dead. They had suppressed the crime and it was a profound secret well kept by the brothers. How their cheeks must have burned and their hearts sunk at the flaming out of this long-suppressed crime. The smallest iniquity has a thousand tongues, and they will blab out exposure. Saul was sent to destroy the Canaanites, their sheep and their oxen; but when he got down there among the pastures he saw some fine sheep and oxen too fat to kill, so he thought he would steal them. Nobody would know it. He drove these stolen oxen and sheep toward home, but stopped to report to the prophet how he had executed his mission, when in the distance the sheep began to bleat and the oxen to bellow. The secret was out, and Samuel said to the blushing and confused Saul: "What meanest the bleating of a sheep that I hear and the bellowing of the cattle?" Ah! my hearer, you cannot keep an iniquity still. At just the wrong time the sheep will bleat and the oxen will bellow. Achan cannot steal the Babylonish garments without being stoned to death, nor Arnold betray his country without having his neck stretched. Look over the police arrests. These thieves, these burglars, these counterfeiters, these highwaymen, these assassins, they all thought they could bury their iniquity so deep down it would never come to resurrection: but there was some shoe that answered to the print in the soil, some false key found in their possession, some bloody knife that whispered of the death, and the public indignation and the anathema of outraged law hurled them into the dungeon or hoisted them on the gallows. Francis I, King of France, stood counseling with his officers how he could take his army into Italy when Ameril, the fool of the court, leaped out from a corner of the room and said: "You had better be consulting how you will get your army back;" and it was found that Francis I., and not Ameril was the fool. Instead of consulting as to the best way of getting into sin you had better consult as to whether you will be able to get out of it. If the world does not expose you, you will tell it yourself. There is an awful power in an aroused conscience. A highwayman plunged out upon Whitfield as he rode along on horseback, a sack of money on the horse, money that he had raised for orphan asylums, and the highwayman puts his hand on the gold, and Whitfield turned to him and said: "Touch that if you dare—that belongs to the Lord Jesus Christ." And the ruffian slunk into the forest. Conscience! Conscience! The ruffian had a pistol, but Whitfield shook at him the finger of doom. Do not think you can hide any great and protracted sin in your heart, my brother. In an unguarded moment it will slip off the lip, or some slight action may for the moment set ajar this door that you wanted to keep closed. But suppose that in this life you hide it and you get along with this transgression burning in your heart, as a ship on fire within for days, hinders the flames from bursting out by keeping down the hatches, yet at last in judgment that iniquity will blaze out before God and the universe.

Learn also from this subject that there is an inseparable connection between all events however remote. The universe is only one thought of God. Those things which seemed fragmentary and isolated are only different parts of that great thought. How far apart seemed those two events: Joseph sold to the Arabian merchants and his rulership of Egypt, yet you see in what a mysterious way God connected the two into one plan. So the events are linked together. You who are aged men look back and group together a thousand things in your life that once seemed isolated. One undivided chain of events reaches from the garden of Eden to the cross of Calvary, and thus up to the Kingdom of Heaven. There is a relation between the smallest insect that hums in the summer air and the archangel on His throne. God can trace a direct ancestral line from the blue jay that next spring will build its nest in the tree behind the house, to some one of the flock of birds which, when Noah hoisted the ark's window, with a whirr and dash of bright wings went out to sing over Mount Ararat. The tulips that will bloom in the garden next spring are this moment being nursed by the snowflakes. The farthest star on one side of the universe could not look toward the furthest star on the other side of the universe and say: "You are no relation to me," for from that bright orb a voice of light would ring across the heavens responding, "Yes, yes, we are sisters." Nothing in God's universe swings at loose ends. Accidents are only God's way of turning a leaf in the book of His eternal decrees. From our cradle to our grave there is a path all marked out. Each event in our life is connected with ever other event in our life. Our losses may be the most direct road to our gain. Our defeat and our victory are twin brothers. The whole direction of your life was changed by something which at the time seemed to you trifling, while some occurrence which seemed tremendous affected you but little. God's plans are magnificent beyond all comprehension. He moulds us and turns and directs us and we know it not. Thousands of years are to Him as the flight of a shuttle. The most terrific occurence does not make God tremble. The most triumphant achievement does not lift Him is to rapture. That one great thought of God goes out through the centuries, and nations rise and fall, and eras pass and the world changes, but God still keeps the undivided mastery, linking event to event and century to century. To God they are all one event, one history, one plan, one development, one system. Great and marvellous are Thy works, Lord God Almighty! It was a very dramatic time last Tuesday at New Orleans, in the Exposition rooms, when a telegram was sent to the President of the United States at Washington, and we waited some fifteen or twenty minutes and then the President's answer came back, and then the presiding officer waved his handkerchief and the signal was sent to Washington that we were ready to have the machinery of the Exposition started, and the President put his finger on the electric button and instantly the great Corliss wheel began to move—rumbling, rumbling, rolling, rolling. It was overwhelming, and 15,000 people clapped and shouted. Just one finger at Washington started that vast machinery, hundreds and hundreds of miles away, and I thought then as I think now, that men sometimes touch influences that respond in the far distance, forty years from now, fifty years from now, 1,000 years from now, a million years from now—one touch sounding through the ages.

Catarrh—A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished, he claims the Catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favourable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.—Montreal Star, Nov. 17, 1883. 48-52t

Sixty Feet Under the Sea.

"I was once a diver—not a wrecker, but a pearl diver—and a hard business it was," recently observed the captain of a Spanish brig to a reporter of the California Times. "We worked off the Mexican and Panama coasts, principally on the Pacific side. Sometimes we worked alone, but generally on shares, and sometimes for pay. We went to the grounds in small sailing vessels, then we took to the small boats and covered as much ground as possible. Each man had a basket, a weight and a knife. For sharks? Yes, but it is a poor defence, for it is almost impossible to swing the arm with any force under water. The best weapon is a short spear. When you reach the ground you strip, put your feet in a big sinker, take the basket that has the rope for hoisting, drop over, and soon find yourself at the bottom.

"Then your business is to knock off as many oysters as you can and pile them into the basket before you lose your wind. It is a terrible strain, but I could stand it in those days for six minutes, and I have known some men who could stay down ten; but it is sure death in the long run. If the ground is well stocked you can get twenty or more shells, but it is all luck. When the basket is full it is hauled up, and after you come up for your wind down you go again, the sinker being hauled up with a small cord for that purpose. It was on one of these trips that I ran afoul of the animal that gave me a lasting fight. You will smile when I say it was only a star fish, but that it really was. I went down sixty feet with a rush, and landing on the edge of a big bunch of coral, swung off into a kind of basin. The basket went ahead of me, and as I swung off to reach the bottom something seemed to spring up all around me, and I was in the arms of some kind of a monster that coiled about my body, arms and legs. I tried to scream, forgetting that I was under water, and lost my wind.

"It was just as if the plant had sprouted up under me and threw its vines and tendrils about me. There were thousands of them, coiling and writhing, and I thought I had landed in a nest of sea-snakes. I gave the signal as soon as I could, and made a break upward, part of the creature clinging to me, while the rest, I could see, was rapidly dropping to pieces. They hauled me into the boat when I reached the surface, and pulled the main part of the animal from me. It was oval, about three feet across, and the five arms seemed to divide into thousands of others. I probably landed on top of that one, which at this time was the largest I had ever seen. I afterwards saw the body of one that was washed ashore on the isthmus that must have had a spread of thirty-five feet." Their power of grasping is considerable, but touch them in a certain way, and they throw off their arms in a regular shower, and are soon reduced to an oval body."

Locking the Tower.

The locking up of the Tower of London at night is one of the cumbersome old ceremonies still in use. A few minutes before the clock strikes eleven, the porter with an attendant appears before the main guard-house, carrying a lantern, and calls out "Escort Keys." The guard, supplied always from the Queen's household troops, then turns out and escorts "Keys" to the outer gate, called the "Spur," each sentry challenging as they pass his post. "Who goes there?" "Keys." After the gates are securely locked and barred, the procession returns, the sentries exacting the same explanation as before. When they come in front of the main guard-house the sentry stationed there gives a loud stamp on the ground with his foot and demands, "Who goes there?" "Keys." "Whose keys?" "Queen Victoria's keys." "Pass Queen Victoria's keys, and all's well." The porter then calls out, "God bless Queen Victoria!" to which the main guard responds, "Amen." The guard then present arms, the officer kisses the hilt of his sword, and the keys are deposited in the Lieutenant's lodgings. After this all ingress or egress is impossible. It sometimes happens that strangers visiting the pile do not get out before the time comes for locking up. In that event they may have to sleep—or keep awake—on benches in the guard-room.

Christmas Customs in Russia.

On New Year's eve the country lasses have a variety of games. They tell each other's fortunes by pouring boiling lead or wax into water, and in the curious shapes into which it falls they fancy they can read their fate. This love game is played in Ireland up to this day. Another device was to fill two bowls with water, one for men, the other for women. Round each they stick bits of paper with names on each of them, then a wax taper is set afloat on the water, and being blown round by some artful persons, many of the slips of paper are burned, which shows very plainly who is going to burn her fingers with marriage vows.

What is the difference between a plumber and a singing-bird?—One lays a pipe, and the other pipes a lay.

Why is a doctor better taken care of than his patients?—Because when he goes to bed somebody is sure to rap him up.

—"Wake up, husband, the day is breaking," said the fond wife. "Let it break, it don't owe me a cent," growls the heavy sleeper.

HASTINGS.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

The past week has been one of more than ordinary interest. On Christmas eve the ladies of the Presbyterian congregation wishing to show their appreciation of the efforts of their pastor, Rev. D. A. Thompson, assembled at the manse and presented Mrs. Thompson with a handsome Wanzer sewing machine, valued at $60. Kind words were spoken and the friends dispersed with "A Merry Christmas."

On Christmas night the annual entertainment and Christmas tree under the auspices of the Methodist Sabbath School, was held in the Town Hall, and was in every way successful. The superintendent, Mr. H. Morton, occupied the chair. The thanks of the school was tendered Miss Anderson for her efforts on behalf of the entertainment. Proceeds over $40.

On Friday night the Grange concert was held in the Town Hall, Mr. Boyce in the chair. The club swinging of Mr. McNaughton, of Peterborough took the people by storm, and rounds of applause greeted each performance. Mr. James Gilloghly, of Lindsay graciously responded to the well-merited encores received after each song. We never heard Mr. Gilloghly in better voice, and hope he may long continue to cheer the hearts of his hearers. "Dublin Dan," as might be expected, brought down the house every time he appeared. Others might be mentioned but space forbids. However, we must not forget Mr. J. K. Moore, to whose energy the success of the entertainment in a great measure depended. Proceeds, $50. The "hop," which followed, was not so well patronized.

On Monday, 29th December, the long-talked of lacrosse concert was held, and is admitted by all to have been the best amateur concert ever given in Hastings. Where all did so well it would be unjust to particularize, but we cannot forbear to mention the name of the efficient chairman, Mr. John Peters, who did so much to add to the pleasure of the occasion. Proceeds, $53.

On Thursday night the Anglican Sabbath School gave their usual Christmas entertainment, which exceeded all previous efforts and was the most successful of the season. The hall in this instance proved too small for the congregation. Dr. O'Gorman acted as chairman. No doubt much of the success is due to the untiring efforts of Mr. Richard Johnston, who, in his anxiety for the prosperity of the school, canvassed day and night for the sale of tickets. Proceeds about $100.

Very little interest was manifested in the municipal elections. The efficiency of the Council being so evident all were again returned by acclamation.

The election of Public School trustees resulted in the return of Messrs. John Peters and T. R. Learmouth.

Horse Breeding in America.

Fifteen million of horses are now owned in America, and more than a million a year must be bred to keep up the supply. The largest portion of these are used for agricultural and heavy draft purposes, and such horses bring from $175 to $250 each. It would be impossible to breed them if it were not for the importations of Percheron horses. Five hundred stallions are now annually imported from France to the United States. The immense wealth they are adding to the nation will be better understood when it is known that the first cross of a Percheron stallion with a native mare doubles the selling value of the colt when mature. Large numbers of Percheron stallions are exported from the United States by Canadian breeders to renew the old French blood so highly prised, and also to give quality, style and action to the large English Draft and Clydesdale stock which has been bred there so long. Nearly one hundred Percheron stallions have been sold to Canada during the past two years by M. W. Dunham, "Oaklawn Farm," Wayne, Illinois, the greatest importer of the French race, who has imported from France nearly 2,000 head. He now has on hand several hundred of the finest Percherons to be found in France nearly all recorded with their pedigrees in the Percheron Stud Book of France.

Butter Buyers

everywhere are refusing to take white, lardy looking butter, except at "grease" prices. Consumers want nothing but gilt-edged butter, and buyers therefore recommend their patrons to keep a uniform color throughout the year by using the Improved Butter Color made by Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. It is the only color that can be relied on to never injure the butter, and to always give the perfect color. Sold by druggists and merchants.

Wheeler's Tissue Phosphates.

That no mischief may be done, it is necessary that remedies placed before the public for general use should be the outcome of medical minds, experienced in the nature and action of drugs and the form of energy they express in the organism. The mixture in the caldron of the witches of Macbeth would be as rational medication as much of the villainous stuff every day taken by the credulous for the cure of disease. It is a gratifying and notable fact that since the introduction of WHEELER'S PHOSPHATES AND CALISAYA no harmful results have ever been occasioned by its use.

Itching Piles—Symptoms and Cure.

The symptoms are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, increased by scratching very distressing, particularly at night, seems as if pin-worms were crawling in and about the rectum: the private parts are sometimes affected. Peterborough Examiner.

PETERBOROUGH, JAN. 8, 1885.

To Our Subscribers.

THE EXAMINER at $1.00 per year, while it presents a large and good paper to the reader, leaves a small margin for profit to the publisher, and it is not unreasonable that with so low a subscription price, payment in advance should be insisted on. The weekly edition of THE EXAMINER has largely increased, and in proportion the paper bills have also grown. These have to be met promptly and in cash. We hope our readers will take the hint implied in this statement and kindly pay up. Each man's bill is a small one, but in the aggregate a large amount is represented, whose receipt would be very acceptable at the beginning of the year, when every account must be squared. All parties having contra accounts with THE EXAMINER office are requested to present them, so that at the beginning of the New Year, the business of the old year may be properly balanced.

Depression Undoubted.

In their speeches at the Tory demonstration both Sir John and Sir Leonard Tilley, emphasized their statements of the success of the N. P., and scouted the idea of depression. Now, though it is an unpleasant fact to insist on, it can be proved to those who desire to believe for political purposes, otherwise, that a serious commercial and industrial depression does exist. If such proof can answer no other good purpose, it will at least serve to strip off the mask from the N. P. pretenders, and to show what really unsafe guides and counsellors they can be, are, and have been. Last session of the Dominion Parliament, Sir Leonard advised people to "clap" on all sail to catch the breeze of prosperity which he hypocritically predicted was to prevail. Many trusting to his wisdom and honesty—both frail trusts—did clap on all sail, to their sorrow, for, thanks to Sir Leonard, they now know more of bankruptcy than of business success. Bradstreet's, which can be relied on for accuracy, having no political purposes to serve, draws a comparatively dreary picture of the state of industry. A summary of its statement respecting manufacturing industries shows that in the Province of Quebec there is a diminution of the number of those employed in manufacturing establishments of 600, leaving out the great decrease in the ship building industry of the city of Quebec. Ontario has 5,557 fewer employes in manufacturing, which makes a total of 6,157 workmen that are thrown out of employment in manufacturing circles alone. In addition, many establishments are working on reduced time, and the general reduction of wages is ten per cent, and it is a matter of personal knowledge with many of our readers, that employment is exceedingly difficult to obtain. These facts are alluded to, to show that legislation cannot control the course of the commercial current: that depression and prosperity follow each other in regular cycles: that the political party that promised to bring about perpetual prosperity and constant employment at high wages, promised what they knew they could not perform: that protection, while it adds to the burden of "hard times" by the high taxes it imposes, has not the power to redeem a single one of the promises made in its name. By listening to the tales of the Conservative politicians, the people have paid high taxes, and made the most rampant administrative corruption possible. If they had listened to the Reform leaders in 1878, they would have had low taxation, and the same wave of prosperity out of which we are rapidly passing, but it would have been a healthy, not a hot-house prosperity, and the succeeding reaction would not have been so violent. Besides, the country would have been blessed with economical and honest administration of its affairs, and the people would not have been open to the humiliating reflection that they had, many of them, been the prey and dupes of designing placemen, who played upon public credulity and cupidity for the sake of compassing party and political ends.

A Contempt.

The political methods of Hon. Oliver Mowat and Sir John Macdonald are not more opposite than the nature of the demonstrations of which they have respectively been the subjects. The former present too patent a contrast to require allusion to; but it may not be amiss to refer to the latter by way of drawing a contrast. On the 9th of September, 20,000 of the honest yeomanry of Ontario met in Toronto to do signal honor to Hon. Mr. Mowat, on the occasion of his return from a mission in which his energy, persistence and plucky fight, secured the rights of this province, and added half a continent to her public domain. On December 18th, 1,200 persons assembled in Toronto to commemorate the fortieth anniversary of their "chieftain's" entrance into public life. This company was chiefly composed of professional politicians, whose subsidized enthusiasm was synonymous with their expectancy of farther favours—the spirit of patriotism that prompts the jackals to follow the lordly lion's quest for prey, that they may share the spoil of his superior prowess. Again on December 30th, Hon. Mr. Mowat was honored in Toronto in a manner of which he may be justly proud. At the City Hall, he was presented with an address by the members of the city Council of Toronto—two thirds of them his political opponents—who recognised in Hon. Mr. Mowat the patriot friend of his province, and who were glad also to "recognise the enrolment of his name on the historical annals of our country as an eminent jurist, as a member of both the Legislature and the Cabinet of Canada prior to Confederation, as a delegate to the Quebec Conference on the Confederation of the Provinces and the creation of our proud Dominion, as adorning for some years the judicial bench, and as filling since 1872 the leading official station in the Province—that of Attorney-General and Premier of Ontario."

Ticking and Shirting from the best Canadian Mills. For reliable goods go to Turnbull's.

Factious Fault-Finding.

A Tory contemporary with more acumen than honesty, points out that Mr. Mowat's appointment of January 28th for the opening of the Ontario Legislature, is a "mere dodge" on his part to "avoid as much as possible, public attention to his doings." It is also asserted that when the Legislatures of the Province and Dominion are sitting at the same time it is impossible that the proceedings of both should be closely scrutinized, and the late session will prevent the giving of any details till too late for criticism. One reason why the session was deferred was for the very purpose of allowing the Government to meet the House with full and complete reports. Heretofore the Tory press has raised dismal howls because reports and returns were not ready at the opening of the session. The fiscal year ending on December 31st, made it impossible to have all the reports and returns ready, if the Legislature met early in the following month. Now by beginning the session on January 28th, the House at the opening session will find the reports, etc., ready for "criticism." Our Tory mentor knowing this as the reason for postponing the opening of the Legislature, is simply dishonest in trying to make it appear that the Mowat administration tried to evade criticism. Even with "Sarah" added to that weakly coterie of incapables, called the opposition, its criticisms are not so dreadful as to make an attempt at evading them worthy of a thought. The "little tyrant" that faced and trounced the "chieftain" on his native ("constitutional") heath, is not the man to be frightened by a bugbear.

Editorial Notes.

The Kingston News credits the N. P. with a lucky catch of shad—by the New Brunswick fishermen. Without disputing the assertion implied that fish are as gullible as the average voter, the fact remains that the N.P. is responsible for a huge school of political suckers and a peculiarly vorscious variety of shark (carcharias monopolodis).

The fact is worthy of notice that Mr. Norquay, the Premier of Manitoba, who presented a sickeningly flattering address to Sir John at the pow-wow, headed the deputation which went to to Ottawa to demand redress of the grievances which Manitoba is suffering at the hands of the Dominion Government. Mr. Norquay apparently thinks once in a while of the interests of his Province, but when the party whip cracks, with canine facility, he licks the hand that smites him.

The Toronto World is authority for the statement that exactly 1,138 sat down to the Sir John banquet in Toronto, and that these swallowed sixty cases of champagne (quarts), sixty cases of claret (quarts), forty-two gallons of sherry and sixty gallons of coffee. Imitation is the sincerest flattery, and this enormous quantity of strong drink consumed is a decisive proof of the sincerity of those who aimed to give a practical shape to their adulation of the "Chieftain."

The Mail says "Reformers hold that municipal affairs and politics should be kept apart; but those of Brockville met in caucus the other day to nominate a party ticket for the mayoralty and council." If this statement is correct—one cannot always swear by the Mail as a political authority—the Reformers of Brockville are doubly wrong—wrong in importing politics into municipal matters, and wrong in imitating the time-honored methods of the Tory party to promote political success.

A favorite theme with the Tory papers is the decadence of the Globe, and we begin to think they are right. In speaking of the delegates to the Sir John "round-up" the Globe neglected to call them loafers and to say that they were "semi-civilised partisans," skirmishing 'round for free drinks and "sadly in need of a bath." If the Globe expects to compete with the Mail it must bestir itself. Not to be able to apply even one blackguard epithet to the rural delegates is a painful indication of journalistic senility.

The London Times is speaking of the folly of "drawing an analogy between the Conservatives of Great Britain and Canada," calls them "radically dissimilar bodies." We should say so. Think of the English Conservatives meeting to honor, say, a man like Beaconsfield, and formally and officially endorsing the bribery business of a gang like the Wilkinson's, Bunting and Meeks. The idea is preposterous. Only the Conservatives of Canada, in convention assembled, officially, solemnly and enthusiastically endorsed the basest bribery conspiracy that ever disgraced civilization—except one, the Pacific Scandal, and they endorsed that, too.

ASTOUNDING DISCLOSURE.

Enormous Bribery Funds for 1882.

HOW SIR JOHN CARRIED THE LAST ELECTION.

The public mind will be again startled by the revelation that comes from Quebec of a single corruption fund for the Dominion elections of 1882, amounting to ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS. In retaliation for the persecution that certain independent French newspapers are subjected to at the hands of Sir Hector Langevin and his tools, a tremendous accusation has been hurled at the Dominion Government by Le Canadien, of Quebec. It is distinctly stated, and it has not been denied, that Langevin and his friends accepted one hundred thousand dollars from Mr. Senecal to carry the elections of 1882! This was one of the bribery funds, in one Province alone. If it were necessary for us to do so, we could tell where that money came from and how the country has had to "recoup" it since. We defy Sir Hector to deny this charge and to bring an action for libel against the Globe; but then he must not let it drop, like the Section B corruptionists. —From the Globe.

SCHOOL ELECTION.

Nomination for School Trustees took place in the Council Chamber on Wednesday, the 24th ult. Mr. Wm. Wallace and Dr. Caldwell were elected by acclamation. A statement of receipts and expenditure was read, which showed a balance on hand of $485.

MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

There was considerable excitement over the election of Reeve, and a large vote polled. Mr. R. C. Strickland was elected by a large majority; and for Councillors, Messrs. Moore, Cox, McWilliams and Isbister. At the conclusion of the count the candidates and electors adjourned to the P. C. A. Hall, where short addresses were made by the successful, and also the unsuccessful candidates, the latter taking their defeat in good part. The proceedings passed off pleasantly, without a jar. The following is the vote polled by the candidates:—Mr. R. C. Strickland, 131; Mr. John Hull, 59; Mr. Jas. Moore, 146; Mr. Wm. Cox, 126; Mr. J. McWilliams, 101; Mr. J. Isbister, 91; Mr. Wm. Leonard, 76; Mr. H. Wynne, 52; Mr. J. Richardson, 37; Mr. Wright, 24; Mr. T. J. Nelson, 8 (had resigned).

ACCIDENTS.

On New Year's Day, while Messrs. John Cooper and Simpson were driving a party to Mr. Sheldrake's, the front axle broke, upsetting the vehicle. Messrs. Cooper and Simpson being caught under the box. Mr. Cooper held the horses, but in extricating himself gave his foot a bad twist and is laid up in consequence. The inmates of the carriage, a covered one, kept perfectly cool and no one hurt.

STRUCK BY A TREE.

Mr. Richard Frice was struck most severely on the leg on Friday last by a tree which he had cut down. It struck a stump while descending and was thrown to one side, Richard receiving a severe blow on the leg.

Mr. C. K. Riggins, Beamsville, writes: "A customer who tried a bottle of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery says it is the best thing he ever used; to quote his own words, "It just seems to touch the spot affected." About a year ago he had an attack of bilious fever, and was afraid he was in for another, when I recommended this valuable medicine with such happy results."

Our Readers' Attention is directed to the advertisement of [illegible] Liniment, which [illegible] Witness. We notice [illegible] of the Weekly Witness has increased [illegible] much during the last couple of years—a clear proof of the estimation in which it is held by the reading public. All the [illegible] emanating from the Witness Office, are "Small, papers" in the true sense of the term, and contain a large amount of varied and interesting news. It is always to a person's advantage to take a first-class city paper in addition to that of the locality in which he resides.

Persons of sedentary habits, the greater part of whose time is passed at the desk, or in some way bent over daily tasks cramp the stomach, weaken its muscles, and incur dyspepsia early. Their most reliable and safest medicinal resource is Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, the Great Blood Purifier, and which is especially adapted to Indigestion, Biliousness, Constipation and Poverty or Impurity of the Blood.

NORWOOD.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

ROB ROY COURT C.O.F.

On Monday, the 29th ult., H. W. Watson, D.D.H.C.R.C.O.F., assisted by several of the Foresters of Peterborough, organized a new Court of Foresters in Norwood, to be called "Rob Roy Court No. 114." The following members of the new court were duly elected officers for the current term, and installed into office by the H. C. Ranger:—Bro. James Kerr, W.C.R.; Bro. W. H. Brethen, V.C.R.; Bro. James Calder, R.S.; Bro. E. Crook, F.S.; Bro. John Ormiston, T.; Bro. Geo. Kerr, Chaplain; Bro. Geo. Phillips, S. W.; Bro. George Ormiston, J.W.; Bro. A. Davidson, S.B.; Bro. Wm. Forster, J.B.; Bro. M. McGregor, Jr.P.C.R.; Bro. Dr. Pettigrew, Court Physician. After the installation the Norwood Foresters entertained their visiting brethren, about 25 in number, with a substantial supper at McGregor's Hotel, served in "mine host's" best style. After ample justice had been done to the edibles, the evening, or rather the morning, was spent in song, recitation, &c., in which Bros. McNeil, F. Clark and Watson shewed to advantage their extraordinary entertaining powers. The new court has sprung into life under the most promising circumstances, and soon will be augmented by a number of new members.

ASPHODEL ELECTION.

Norwood was the centre of a hot contest for municipal honors in our mother township Asphodel. During Monday the contestants, with their friends, worked hard to bring in their supporters, and No. 3 Division, which polled the largest vote it has done for many elections, gave Mr. Brown a solid vote of 104, as against 18 given for his opponent, Mr. Walsh—just the number of Roman Catholic voters in that division. The latter polled a majority of 60 in Nos. 1 and 2 divisions. Mr. Brown was elected Reeve by a majority of 46, a very large majority considering the strength of his opponent. Mr. Jas. Stephenson was elected Deputy Reeve over his opponent, Mr. Thos. Howson. The Councillors elect are Messrs. Geo. Elliott, John Fitzpatrick and M. Lynch, the latter being the only member of the old Council re-elected.

COUNTY MODEL SCHOOL.

The session closed a short time ago with a highly satisfactory result. The work done was thorough, and the pupils showed upon the whole a good practical knowledge of the art of teaching, which reflects creditably on the Principal, Mr. Hutchison. The examiners were J. Davidson, M.A., and the Inspector. The following is the list of students in attendance during the past term, all of whom obtained professional certificates:—Robert Spance, Minnie Harper, Christina Boland, Annie Regan, Josie Ellsworth, Lizzie Clark, Ettie Wigmore, John McKelvie, Harry Lewis, Alfred Nicholl. All these who desired to teach have obtained suitable positions, and we wish them success in their undertakings.

ENTRANCE EXAMINATIONS.

There were thirty candidates for entrance to High Schools presented themselves for examination at Norwood, but the results are not yet known. Mr. Davidson presided at the examination here and the Inspector at Lakefield, the county having been divided this year into two parts.

KEENE.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

At least forty-three more happy New Years to all! "Now is the winter of our discontent made glorious by this sun."... What lovely weather! The weekly mild wave is here.

Grand skating, both on the river and in the Victoria Rink, which is now in full action under the skillful management of Mr. R. McIntyre, our popular and reliable rink-master.

We were surely right last week about the lady directress in the office of the clerk of the weather, for before our items appeared in print, she had turned on the cold draught, and put us in icy fetters; but alas for the snow, the beautiful snow! Will it ever appear, does any one know? Probably the above named L. D. will relent, and send us sleighing by the time our readers see this—a consummation heartily to be wished.

The work to be done on that spire is growing small by degrees, and beautifully less. The tinners redeemed much time last week by working after dark, causing a new and flaming star to appear in our benighted locality, as their fire gleamed forth in mid-air, startling many a traveller with its brilliant glow. The building committee deserve great credit for their prompt and provident care in having the new church already insured for something near eight thousand dollars—the right thing to do.

Mr. John Wood is getting out a large lot of A. 1. lumber and timber for a new house.

Mr. K. Mark, our new senior teacher, has moved into Mr. Shortt's house on Maine street, and we are glad to have so good and true a man come among us.

Miss Baptie, who is to teach the juniors, is a lady from Peterborough, and comes well recommended.

Squire Lang has moved into a new and spacious house on the corner opposite the Methodist church, High street, which house when finished, and handsome wire fencing completed, will be one of the prettiest and pleasantest residences in our little town.

Dr. Shaw occupies the Squire's former dwelling as drug store, office and residence.

Scarlet fever has again broken out in this direction, several members of the family of Mr. A Sherar on the sixth line, being prostrated by this fell sickness. We hope this winter will not duplicate last winter in the ravages of contagious diseases.

We are sorry for losing a good citizen in Mr. John Dickson, our former miller. We will all miss him, and the youngsters will not soon supply his place, for he was ever ready to help or accommodate them, and was deservedly popular with all of us.

We have a new blacksmith, Mr. W. Gibbs, from Peterborough, who has opened shop in the building formerly occupied by Mr. H. Cruickshank. The new smith is welcome, especially if good work is to be included in the "repairing" mentioned with him. A waggon and carriage shop is badly wanted here, as at present there is nothing of the kind, and all breakages in that line have to be taken to Mather's, or some other corners, two or more miles away, for repairs.

Still another is to be added to our list of new-comers, in the person of Mr. William Stephenson, jr., of Norwood, who purposes opening a branch business in the brick store next door to Gall's hotel. He will sell dry goods, groceries, boots and shoes, and hopes to secure the custom of village and surrounding country, by deserving it.

We omitted last week to mention the loss of our public school teacher, Mr. W. J. Campbell, who takes the school at Mather's Corners this year. Mr. Campbell did not intend teaching any more for some time when he declined remaining with us, as he wished to attain a higher level of scholarship. But his intentions were frustrated by occurrences over which he had no control, so he accepted the above named school. The children gave him a neat little present of a writing case, as a token of their regard, and he carries the good wishes of the whole community with him wherever he goes, as he was the best teacher they have had for many years.

The returns of the municipal elections have not all been received, but so far as is known the old council have been re-elected.

A FATED FAMILY.

Toronto, Jan. 2—Mr. Burrows Raymond, an old resident, died on Monday and was buried this afternoon. Almost immediately after the coffin was taken out of the house, his widow, apparently in good health, dropped down dead, and a daughter fell into hysterical fits. Her life is despaired of.

A dwelling house and five acres of land in Meaford were swept away Wednesday morning by the bursting of a mill dam, which inundated the village. A bridge was also destroyed and damage done to the extent of $15,000.

An outbreak of smallpox has occurred in Seymour township, East Northumberland, four cases existing in one family. The disease is of a mild type, and the patients have been isolated to prevent the contagion spreading.

WARREN LELAND,

whom everybody knows as the celebrated manager of the Largest Hotel Enterprises

of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship lying around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Struck with Mr. LELAND'S case recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failing to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.

Mr. LELAND has personally used

for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 37th and 38th Streets, New York.

Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

THE RED FLAG.

BY

M. E. BRADDON.

Author of "Lady Audley's Secret," etc. etc. etc.

"And ye'll both go there some day, my darlints," said tender-hearted Biddy, "and it's ladies ye'll be, and never a poor day ye'll know in cauld Ireland; for by the Lord's grace the Captain's rich cousins may all die off like rotten sheep, and his honor may come in for the estates? There's quaker things have happened than that in my knowledge, and sure it's great hunters the gentleman are, and may ride home with broken necks any day."

Rose said she hoped her cousins would not die; but she wished they would ask her father and all of them to go and live at the great white house near the lakes, which Biddy described as a grander palace than the king's chateau at Laeken, which she and Rose had been taken to see one day with the Captain and his young wife, before Kathleen's birth.

The children were never tired of hearing Biddy talk of the lakes and mountains, the Druids' Circle, MacGillycuddy's Reeks, and the great house in which their father was born. It was their ideal of paradise, a home where sorrow or care could never enter, gardens always full of flowers, a land of everlasting summer, woods and glens peopled with fairies, skies without a cloud, gladness without alloy.

One gray hopeless afternoon, when there had not been a rift in the slate-colored sky since daybreak, Kathleen suddenly turned from the window, against which she had been flattening her pretty little nose, in the hopeless attempt to find amusement in looking into the empty street, and asked.

"Does it ever rain in Ireland, Biddy?"

"Yes, love, it does rain sometimes; and sure, darlint, that's why the hills and the valleys are so soft and green. You wouldn't have it always dhry; the flowers wouldn't grow without any rain."

"Must there be rain?" inquired Kathleen simply. "Papa says I mustn't cry. Why should the sky cry? The sky is good, isn't it?"

"Yes, dear; it is God's sky."

"But pa says it's naughty to cry."

The time came only too soon when very real tears, tears of passionate grief and wild despair, were shed in that dingy Belgian lodging; and when the two children and their faithful servant found themselves alone in the bleak strange world, face to face with starvation.

The Captain caught cold one bitter February night, coming home, in the teeth of the east wind, from his favorite cafe; and although devotedly nursed by Biddy and Rose, who was sensible and womanly beyond her years, the cold developed into acute bronchitis, under which James O'Hara succumbed, a few days after his thirty-seventh birthday, leaving his children penniless and alone in the world. There were only a few francs in the Captain's purse at the time of his death; for the short sharp illness had been expensive, albeit the English doctor, a retired navy surgeon, had been most modest in his charges. The Captain's watch and signet-ring were pledged to pay for the funeral; and while the coffin was being carried to the cemetery, a letter, ill-spelt and ill-written, but full of tender womanly feeling, was on its way to the wealthy Miss Fitzpatrick of Bath, pleading for her orphaned great-niece Kathleen, and Kathleen's penniless step-sister.

Miss Fitzpatrick of Bath was a staunch Roman Catholic, and a conscientious woman; but she was not a warm-hearted woman, and she was not deeply moved by the thought of the Captain's untimely death, or of his desolate children. She had been very angry with him for running away with her niece, who was also her companion and slave; and she had never left off being angry; yet she had given him money from time to time, considering it her duty, as a rich woman, to help her poor relations. And now she was not inclined to ignore that duty, or deny the orphans' claim.

She went over to Bruges, saw the children, and in Kathleen beheld the image of her own dead sister's little girl as she had first seen her twenty years ago, when the orphan was sent to her rich aunt, as the legacy of a dying sister, the sole issue of a foolish marriage. And behold, here was another golden-haired child, sole issue of another foolish-marriage, looking up at Theresa Fitzpatrick with just the same heaven-blue eyes, and the same scared shrinking look, as doubting whether to find a friend or a foe in the richly-clad stately dame.

If Miss Fitzpatrick had been of the melting mood, she would assuredly have taken the child to her heart and her home, and the child's dark-eyed, frank-browed, lovable stepsister with her. There was ample room for both girls, in the big handsome house at Bath—empty rooms which no one ever visited save the housemaid with her brooms and brushes; luxuriously-furnished rooms, swept and garnished, and kept in spotless order for nobody.

Although there was ample room in Miss Fitzpatrick's house, there was no room in Miss Fitzpatrick's heart for two orphans.

"I shall do my duty to you, my deara," she said, "and I shall make no distinctions, although you, Rose, are no relation of mine, and have no claim upon me."

"You won't take Rose away?" cried Kathleen, pale with terror, the blue eyes filling with tears.

"No, my dear, I shall not separate you while you are so young," answered Miss Fitzpatrick, complacently settling herself in her sable-bordered mantle. "By and by, when you are young women, you will have to make your way in the world, and then you may be parted. But for the next few years you shall be together. How have they been educated?" she asked, appealing to Biddy, who stood by, curtsying every time the lady looked her way.

"Sure, ma'am, my lady, the Captain was very careful with them; he'd never have let the dear childer out of his sight, only he wanted a little gentlemen's society now and then, blessed soul, and he liked to spend half an hour or so at a caffy. But many's the day I've heard um reading poethry to the two childer, be-tiful—Hamlick and the Ghost, and King Leerd, and Lilly O'Rourke. There never was a better father, if the Lord had been pleased to spare him," concluded Biddy, with her apron at her eyes.

"My good woman, you do not understand my question," said Miss Fitzpatrick impatiently. "I want to know what these children have been taught. I begin to fear they have been sorely neglected by that foolish man. Can they read and write and cipher?"

Biddy, hard pushed, was fain to confess that Kathleen did not even know her letters, and that Rose was very backward with her pen, though she could read beautifully.

"I thought as much" said Miss Fitzpatrick. "And now, Bridget Ryan, I'll tell you what I mean to do; you seem to have been a faithful servant, so I shall not allow you to be a loser by Captain O'Hara's death. I shall pay you your wages in full, and send you home to Ireland."

"With the young ladies?" asked Biddy, beaming.

"What should the young ladies do in Ireland?" exclaimed Miss Fitzpatrick; "they haven't a friend in that wretched country. No, you can go back to your home, for I suppose you have some kind of home to go to. But I shall place the two young ladies in a convent I have been told about, three miles from this city, where they will be carefully educated and kindly looked after by the good nuns. I shall pay for their schooling and provide their wardrobes till they are grown up; but when they come to nineteen or twenty, they will have to earn their own living. The better they are educated the easi r they will find it to earn their bread."

Biddy could but confess that Miss Fitzpatrick, upon whom the elder sister had no shadow of claim, was acting very generously; yet she was in despair at the thought of being separated from the children she had nursed, and who were to her as her own flesh and blood. If Miss Fitzpatrick had sent them all three to Ireland, and given her a cottage, a potato-field, and a pig, she felt she could have worked for the two children, and brought them up in comfort, and been as happy as the days were long. They would have run about the fields barefoot, and with wild uncovered hair, and made a friend and companion of the pig, but they would have grown up strong and beautiful in that free life; and it occurred to her that such a life would be quite as much happier for them than the confined convent in the flat sandy country outside Bruges, the gaunt white house within high walls, the tall slated roof of which she and her charges had seen one day in their afternoon walk.

She accepted her wages from Miss Fitzpatrick, but she declined the fare home to Ireland.

"It may be long days before I see that blessed counthry," she said, "for, with all submission to your ladyship, I shall try to get a place in Bruges, so that I may be near these darling childer, and gladden my eyes with the sight of them now and then, as the good nuns give lave."

Miss Fitzpatrick had no objection to this plan. She was a good woman according to her lights, but as hard as a stone. She wanted to do her duty in a prompt and business-like manner, and to provide for these orphans; not because she cared a straw for them, but because they were orphans, and to feed the widow and the orphan is the business of a good Catholic.

She put the two girls into a fly next morning, after spending an uncomfortable night at the best hotel in Bruges, where the foreign arrangements and the all-pervading odors afflicted her sorely, and drove straight off to the Sisters of Sainte Marie.

Here, in a rambling chilly-looking house with large white-washed carpetless rooms, and corridors smelling of plaster, Miss Fitzpatrick handed the orphans over to the Reverend Mother, a stout comfortable-looking Belgian, who, for a payment in all of ninety pounds a year, was to lodge, feed, clothe, and educate the two children from January to December. There were to be no vacations—the school year was to be really a year. Children who had parents might go home for a summer holiday; but for these orphans the white-walled convent in its flat sandy garden was to be the only home.

And now there began for those orphan sisters a new life—very strange, very cold and formal, after the life they had led with the careless yet loving father and the devoted nurse. It was a life of rule and routine, of work and deprivation. The convent school was a cheap school, and though the Sisters were conscientious in their dealings with their pupils, the fare was of the poorest, the beds were hard and narrow, the covarlets were thin, domitories draughty and carpetless, everything bleak and bare. The children rose at unnatural hours in the cold dark mornings, and were sent to bed early to save fire and candle. It was a hard life, with scarcely a ray of sunshine. Some of the nuns were kind and some of the nuns were cross, just as women are outside convent-walls. There were no pleasures, there was very little to hope for; the nuns were too poor to afford pleasure for their pupils. Chapel and lessons, lessons and chapel; chapel twice a day, lessons all day long; that was the round of life. Half an hour's recreation now and then—just one brief half-hour of leisure and play, if the children had strength to play, after two long hours bending over books, puzzling over sums.

Rose bore her trials like a heroine. Kathleen fretted a good deal at first, and then when she grew older and stronger she became a little inclined to occasional outbreaks of rebellion. She had a sweet loving nature, and could be ruled easily by love—by threats or hard usage not at all. The nuns, happily, were fond of her, and petted her for her beauty and brightness and graceful ways. While dark proud Rose, earnest, thoughtful, laborious, plodded on at her studies, always obedient, always conscientious, Kathleen learnt by fits and starts, was sometimes attentive, sometimes neglectful, sometimes industrious to fever-point, sometimes incorrigibly idle. She had all the freaks of genius.

Life went on thus with a dismal monotony for five long years; till it seemed to the sisters as if they could never have known any world outside those convent-walls, any horizon beyond that western line of level marsh and meadow, where they used to watch the sun going down in a golden bed behind the tall black poplars. To Kathleen it seemed as if the old sweet life, with father and nurse, must have been a dream. One bitter grief had come to them in the last year. The good faithful Biddy was dead. It had been her custom to visit them on the last Saturday in every month for an hour in the afternoon, by special permission of the Superior; and neither storm nor rain, snow nor hail, had ever kept Biddy away. Her visit was a bright spot in the lives of the girls. They clung to her and loved her in that too brief hour as if she had been verily their mother. The vulgar Irish face, the hands hardened by toil, the coarse common clothes, were, to them, as dear as if she had been the finest lady in the land. She came to them laden with fruit and cakes, and she brought them bright-colored neck ribbons to enliven their sombre black uniform. She told them her scraps of news about the outside world. She walked with them in the garden, or sat with them in the visitors' parlor, and they were utterly happy so long as she stayed.

At last, after they had been four years and a half in the convent, there came one never to be forgotten Saturday on which there was no visitor for the Demoiselles O'Hara. It was a peerless June day, and the girls had pictured Biddy as she walked along the sandy road from Bruges, where she had a hardish place as maid-of-all-work in a Flemish tradesman's family. They fancied how she would enjoy the sunshine, and the hedges all in flower, and the song of the lark. If they could but be with her, thought Kathleen, dancing along beside her, gathering the wild flowers! But hark! there was the convent clock striking three. In another moment the bell would ring, the loud harsh bell, which sounded so sweet upon that one particular afternoon. Biddy was the soul of punctuality. The clock had seldom finished striking before the bell rang. The girls were sitting in the garden, as near the gateway and the porter's lodge as they were allowed to go. They waited and waited, listening for the bell, which never rang; which never was again to be rung by that honest hand. At last the clock struck four, and they knew that all hope was over for that day. From three to four was the hour appointed by authority for Biddy's visit. She would not presume to come after that hour.

"There will be a letter to-morrow, perhaps," said Rose, with a sigh. "Poor dear Biddy! It is such an effort for her to write."

But the days went by, and there was no letter. The last Saturday in July came, and there had been no sign or token from Biddy. The rules of the convent school were strict, and the girls were allowed to write to no one except relations.

That last Saturday in July was a dull stormy day, a sullen sultry day, with heavy thunder showers. Again the two girls pictured their friend upon the sandy road, this time wrapped in her Irish frieze cloak, the countrywoman's cloak which she had worn ever since Rose could remember, and struggling against the storm with her stout Belgian umbrella of dark-red cotton. But the clock struck three, and the clock struck four, the girls waiting through the hour with listening ears and beating hearts, and there was no touch of Bridget Ryan's hand upon the convent bell.

Then Rose grew desperate, and went straight to the Reverend Mother, and asked permission to write to Bridget, who must be ill, or surely she would have come. The superior hesitated a little; rules were strict, and letters broken—and so on and so on. But the anxious face and tearful eyes touched her, and she gave the required permission and the necessary postage-stamp.

Three days Rose and Kathleen waited anxiously for the reply to their letter, and then came a formal epistle from Monsieur le Bruges, who had the honor to acquaint the young ladies that their late father's old servant, Madame Ryan, had died at midnight on the last Saturday in June, after a very short illness, and that she had bequeathed the whole of her savings to Mademoiselle Rose O'Hara, said savings amounting, after payment of funeral expenses, to five hundred and fifty francs.

Deep and bitter was the grief of the sisters at the loss of this faithful friend—the only woman friend whose warm motherly love Kathleen had ever known. Rose gave a hundred francs to the Reverend Mother to be spent in masses for the beloved dead. Kathleen wanted her to devote all the money to that sacred purpose.

"What do we want with the poor darling's money?" she asked.

"Nothing now, dear," answered the more experienced elder sister; "but the day may come when a little money will save us from a good deal of misery."

The day came when those few gold pieces, which Rose kept under lock and key with all her little treasures in a small japanned box that had belonged to her father, made the two girls independent of tyranny, or of that which seemed to them as tyranny of an altogether unbearable kind.

The good Reverend Mother, under whose firm but friendly rule Rose and Kathleen had grown up, one to a tall well-developed girl of eighteen, the other to a slim sapling of eleven, was transferred to a larger and wealthier convent, and was replaced by a sour-visaged nun whose piety was of the gloomy order, and who wanted to rule the community with a rod of iron. Everything was changed under her dominion, every rule made more severe, every little innocent pleasure curtailed or forbidden. A dark pall came down upon the convent, and discontent brooded like an evil presence by the hearth.

Kathleen, in high health, active, full of life and spirits, was one of the first to break the new rules. Her gaiety was misconduct, her fresh ringing laugh an offence. She was continually getting into disgrace; and Rose, who saw her punished by all sorts of small privations and by the burden of extra tasks, rebelled in her heart against the tyrant, although she urged her young sister to submission and obedience.

There came a day—a bright summer day—when the punishment lesson was heavier than usual, although Kathleen's offence had been of the slightest kind.

"Kathleen O'Hara has an obstinate temper, and it must be conquered," said the reverend mother, when she was told of a blotted exercise or a little outbreak of temper.

To-day Kathleen had a headache. She was flushed and feverish, overcome by the midsummer heat. Just a year had gone since Bridget's death, and it seemed to both girls as if that year had been the longest in their lives—the longest and most unhappy. The child made a feeble effort to write the German exercise which had been given to her as a punishment task; but soon gave up altogether, and sat crying, with the book open before her, and the sun pouring its fierce light upon her flushed, tear-stained face.

This was taken for rank contumacy, and when the Reverend Mother came upon her round of inspection from a superior class, she ordered Kathleen off to a room at the top of the house, a bare garret under the thin hot roof, which was used only for solitary confinement in very bad cases. It was the blackhole of the convent.

Kathleen was marched up to this place of durance vile, and kept there till evening prayers, with the refreshment of a slice of black bread—such bread as the coachmen give their horses in that country—and a cup of water. In the cool eventide she was let out of her prison, which had been like an oven all day, and she and Rose lay down together side by side in their narrow beds at the end of the long dormitory, nearest the door.

When all the others were asleep Rose knelt by her sister's bed, and kissed and comforted her; but the child was broken-hearted. She said she would die in that miserable house. Lessons were given to her which she could not learn, and then she was punished for not learning them. She had been frightened in that dreadful room. She had heard things—awful things—running about behind the walls, squeaking and screaming. She thought they were demons.

"They were rats, darling," said Rose, caressing and soothing her. "You shall never, never be put in that room again, if you will be brave, and trust me."

Rose shuddered at the thought of that stifling garret, under the burning roof, and the rats running about behind the wainscot. She had heard of children being eaten alive by rats.

"Shall we steal out of the house to-morrow morning as soon as it is light, and go away and live by ourselves somewhere?" she asked, in a whisper.

Russell Sage

is a well-known operator in Wall street, who is generally considered as "up to snuff." Hence, it may have been quite natural that a country man who reads the papers recently called at his office and asked for a package of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. He discovered his mistake, but he made no mistake in the article called for. This Remedy, when applied with Dr. Pierce's "Nasal Douche," will surely and rapidly eradicate the most aggravated case of catarrh, with all its unpleasant and dangerous accompaniments.

PRINCESS BEATRICE'S AFFIANCED.

London, Dec. 31—The betrothal is announced of the Queen's youngest daughter, Princess Beatrice, to Prince Henry Maurice, of Battenburg. The Prince is 28 years old, one year younger than his intended. He is a cousin of Grand Duke Louis IV, of Hesse, who married the late Princess Alice.

Their Name is Legion.

Legions of people have had their lives made miserable by Piles. This painful difficulty is often induced and always aggravated by Constipation. Kidney-Wort is the great remedy for all affections of this kind. It acts as a gentle cathartic, promotes a healthy action of the bowels, and soothes and heals the inflamed surfaces. It has cured hundreds of cases where all other remedies and applications have failed. Sold by all druggists.

A SHANTYMAN'S DEATH.

Eganville, Jan. 2—A man named Barker, in the employ of J. R. Booth, was rolling sawlogs in one of the Victoria Lake shanties, when the pile in rear of him started, rolled against him, and jammed his head between two logs, killing him instantly. He was a native of England, aged 30 years.

Always Prompt in Action.

This is just what every sufferer wants—prompt action and rapid relief from pain. The grandest discovery of the age, the great pain cure, is Polson's NERVILINE—prompt, powerful, pleasant to the taste, and yet so pure that it may be given to the youngest infant. Try a 10 cent sample bottle, which you can purchase at any drug store. Nerviline, the great, sure, and prompt pain cure. The large bottles are only 25 cents.

INSURRECTION IN TURKEY.

Constantinople, Dec. 31—The fires of insurrection are smouldering among the populace of Constantinople, and seditious placards are posted nightly in conspicuous places throughout the city. The Turks attacked the town of Mill, near Perepe, in Macedonia, and killed and wounded several persons.

A. D. Noyes, Newark, Michigan, writes: "I have enquired at the drug stores for Dr Thomas' Eclectric OIL but have failed to find it. We brought a bottle with us from Quebec, but it is nearly gone and we do not want to be without it, as my wife is troubled with a pain in the shoulder, and nothing else gives relief. Can you send us some?"

An employe in the Quebec postoffice has been awarded the first prize offered by the Literary and Agricultural Society of Paris, France, for the best poem. There were twenty other competitors, the recipient of the honor being the only Canadian.

Shall We let the Child Die?

A hard-hearted political economist, looking at a pale and puny child feebly gasping as it lay upon a pillow, says that the child might as well die. It is so weak and poor that its life will never be worth much anyhow. There are already a good many people in the world who are of not much account anyhow. And what's the use of adding to their number another weakling, who has but slender chance of ever amounting to anything?

Now, no matter what the thinks about letting the child die. About this time the head of the family generally gets out of the room and says, "Shall it die? No! No! As long as there is a dollar to be found that will save that child, that child shall not die! I'll spend the last dollar to save the child!" Well, try a bottle of Hagyard's Pectoral Syrup on that child. And then pour into it a little strength. He survives the attack, and other children have been brought almost from death to healthy life by Hagyard's Pectoral Syrup. Your druggist sells it.

THE N. P. AND WHEAT.

The N. P. is still working havoc among the Canadian millers. The Ogilvie & Co'y. firm of millers in Winnipeg have shut down their mills and stopped manufacture owing to the fact that Minneapolis millers are now selling flour in Canada at less than the price of Canadian wheat. Ogilvie & Co. are now holding on to their wheat instead of selling at a loss. The same difficulty exists in this section of the country, and if Sir Leonard Tilley does not change his one-sided tariff the whole milling trade will have gone to the wall. It is little wonder that the Canadian farmers are grumbling at the low price of wheat.

Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is a combination of several medicinal herbs which exert a most wonderful influence in curing pulmonary consumption and all other diseases of the lungs, chest and throat. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, and gives ease even to the greatest sufferer. Coughs, colds, shortness of breath and affections of the chest, attended with weakness of the digestive organs, or with general debility, seem to vanish under its use. No other remedy acts so readily in allaying inflammation or breaking up a severe cold, even the most obstinate cough is overcome by its penetrating and healing properties. When children are affected with colds, coughs, inflammation of the lungs, croup, quinsey and sore throat, this Syrup is of vast importance. The number of deaths among children from these diseases is truly alarming. It is so Palatable that a child will not refuse it, and is put at such a price that will not exclude the poor from its benefits.

A LEAP YEAR PROPOSAL.

At the civic nomination Kingston, the meeting had hardly been organized when Miss Annie E. Conlan, dressed neatly, her face covered with a green veil, appeared on the platform. She waved her hand, bowed, and in a thin quivering voice, nominated Dr. John Stewart "a fit and proper person" for mayor for 1885. Again she bowed and was escorted off the platform by the gentleman she had proposed. As she departed she was enthusiastically cheered. This was the first instance in which a woman appeared as the nominator of a candidate.

A PECULIAR CASE.

Two years and six months ago little Robbie Fogarty, of Cobourg, swallowed a round piece of iron, the top of an ordinary bone-handled knife, about the size of a twenty-five cent piece. Ever since then he had trouble in swallowing anything. He was ill for a few days last week, and on Sunday vomited up the identical piece of iron, which had remained in the throat for two years and a half. The iron had corroded some, and was much thinner than when swallowed.

Parting with Friends is one of the sad necessities of life, and often mark life's milestones as we travel the path from the beginning to the end. Strange to say, Dr. Scott Putnam has discovered a means by which old time friends are separated and that without a single qualm. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor promptly, painlessly and with certainty separates the oldest and most strongly cemented corns that can be found. It cannot fail for Putnam's is sure, safe and painless. Beware of any article offered "just as good," and take only Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor.

SIXTY THOUSAND BARRELS OF OIL ON FIRE.

One of the 30,000 barrel oil tanks at West Junction, near Elmira, N. Y., exploded this morning and both were soon a seething mass of flames. The shock was felt in Elmira, in many cases knocking dishes from shelves and breaking mirrors. No one was hurt seriously, although the houses near the tanks were badly damaged, being riddled as if by cannon The fire is still raging. The loss will be $100,000.

TROUBLE AHEAD.

There is likely to be trouble over the annexation by England of Santa Lucia on the African coast. Germany claims that Luwald, the explorer, acquired from the King of Zululand the right to the bay and 200,000 acres adjoining on behalf of Ludewita, the merchant who established a trading post at Angra Pequena, and who has placed the territory under German protection.

A Walking Skeleton.

Mr. E. Springer, of Mechanicsburg, Pa., writes: "I was afflicted with lung fever and abscess on lungs, and reduced to a walking skeleton. Got a free trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, which did me so much good that I bought a dollar bottle. After using three bottles, found myself once more a man, completely restored to health, with a healthy appetite, and a gain in flesh of 40 lbs.

RELIGIOUS RIOTS.

St. John's, Nfld., Dec. 24th.—The Conception Bay Orangemen have issued a proclamation of a public procession through the streets of Harbour Grace and Riverhead. It is said the Roman Catholics threaten a repetition of last year's disturbances. The corvette Tenedos has been despatched to Harbour Grace, and an inspection of police with a large force of horse and infantry constabulary left this morning for the scene.

ANNEXATIONS IN AUSTRALIA.

The Daily Telegraph declares that in the event of any attempt to annex any territory contiguous to Australia the commander of the British squadron has instructions to hoist the British flag over the entire Louisiade and Woodlark groups, comprising over 100 small islands, and also over Long Island and Rooks' Island and adjacent to New Zealand.

Thousands Say So.

Mr. T. W. Atkins, Girard, Kan., writes: "I never hesitate to recommend your Electric Bitters to my customers, they give entire satisfaction and are rapid sellers." Electric Bitters are the purest and best medicine known and will positively cure Kidney and Liver complaints. Purify the blood and regulate the bowels. No family can afford to be without them. They will save hundreds of dollars in doctor's bills every year. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by Taylor & McDonald.

A LILIPUTIAN BABY.

Mrs. Chas. Tracey, of Kingsbridge, N. Y., gave birth to a male child on Monday, weighing 11 ounces. It is but six inches long, but full of life and otherwise naturally formed. The parents are well developed. The baby's body could be circled by a fourteen-year-old child's thumb and index finger. The head is perfectly formed, and is about the size of a crab-apple. Its mouth is so small that it is unable to partake of its natural nourishment.

Money.

Mr. John A Bennett, of Otonabee, is prepared to make loans on real estate and to purchase mortgages. Loans will be made at the lowest rates of interest, payable when the borrower deems the most convenient time, the principal, being payable at such times as may be agreed upon. Expenses are very light. 12-tf

The School Board.

There is no change in the constitution of the Peterborough School Board this year. The retiring members were re-elected by acclamation, Messrs. Stratton, Wrighton, Burnham and Sawers, and at a special meeting held on Wednesday night, Messrs. Dumble and Weir were re-appointed representatives of the Council.

Cobourg's Condition.

Owing to the fact that Cobourg owes the Ontario Government $80,000 all the members of the old Council, except Mayor Gravely, declined to be nominated for re-election, and the new batch of Councillors nominated have withdrawn. However, the old Council holds office and responsibility till their successors are elected. One of the old Council—a good Tory, too,—advocates the honorable method of repudiation as the solution of the difficulty.

A Beautiful Calendar.

We have to give our thanks to Mr. George A. Cox, agent of the Citizens' Insurance Company—fire, accident and life—for one of the most artistically excellent calendars, in design and execution, yet issued. It consists of a beautiful chromo-lithograph, of a poetical Irish girl—Kathleen of "Terence's Farewell" —with a rich back-ground of turf, tree and flower, typical of the exuberant growth of the Emerald Isle. This neat little work of art makes both a beautiful and useful present.

Obituary.

We are called on to record the death of another pioneer settler, Mr. James Armstrong of Ashburnham, who passed away on Sunday morning. Deceased, who was widely known and respected, was a native of county Formanagh, Ireland, and came to Canada fifty years ago. He lived a short time in Ashburnham, and afterwards in Asphodel, whence he removed to Otonabee, buying the farm on which his son, Mr. H. S. Armstrong, now resides. Seven years ago he came to Ashburnham to spend the autumn of his life. He was a faithful member of the Bible Christian church. His remains were interred in the Little Lake cemetery.

Journalistic.

We have to offer our handsome neighbor, the Lindsay Post our congratulations on the occasion of its reaching its 25th birthday. If the Post goes on improving on its present excellence it will soon be fit for the journalistic millennium.——The Galt Reformer comes out for the new year brightened with ~~an entire new dress~~ ——The Port Hope Guide celebrates its 54th birthday by occupying new business premises and being printed on a new Campbell press.——The Brockville Weekly Recorder, a veteran Canadian journal, staunchly Reform, celebrates its 64th anniversary by coming out in greatly enlarged size and in the popular eight page form. We extend to our contemporaries, severally, our warmest congratulations, and hope that the reward that has attended their enterprise in the past may prove only an earnest of future prosperity.

Mr. Reynolds, leader of the City Band Orchestra, has purchased one of those fine violins at the Bell Organ office. 1in.

JUST received, another lot of White Blankets all sizes, and cheaper than ever. JOHN ERSKINE.

Borough Brevities.

The troubled waters of Spalding's Bay will now take a rest.

Councillor McNaughton, one of the councillors elect for No. One ward, is said to have got 35 "plumpers" last Monday.

During the month of December there were registered with the town clerk, 14 births, 7 marriages and 8 deaths.

The three successful candidates in No. One ward each polled exactly the same number of votes—187.

The open winter weather we are treated to so liberally must remind persons born in the old country, of home.

There were 39 more births registered in town in 1884 than in the previous year—198 to 159, 5 more marriages—99 to 94, and one less death—110 to 111.

On Monday Mr. C. E. Smith, of Smith's grocery, found about a dozen Enfield blank cartridges under a heap of straw in rear of his stable on Brock street. By whom left or with what object is not known.

Number One ward still leads the van as the pioneer of advanced civilization. On Monday it furnished two ladies, who were the first in the history of the town to exercise the privilege of female franchise.

The opening services of the week of prayer were held in the Murray street Baptist church on Monday evening; conducted by Rev. Mr. Manning. There was a good attendance, most of the ministers in town being also present.

On Sunday morning last Rev. John Craig, East Indian Missionary, preached in the Murray street Baptist church, dealing with the interests of Indian missions, which the Baptist body has been foremost in promoting.

The Olivette Club, an itinerant social and Terpsichorean organization, enjoyed the hospitality of Dr. Pigeon on New Year's eve. The members of the Club met at 9 o'clock, and danced the old year out and the new year in.

In our allusion in last issue to the Baptist church repairs, mention was omitted of the fact that the carpenter work was done by Mr. George Elliott, and in the most satisfactory manner. Any one wanting good, neat, rapid and tasty carpentering done, can't go amiss in employing Mr. Elliott.

On New Year's day a curling contest was played at the rink between "Old Country" and "Canada." The "Canucks" won the day by a majority of 2. The ice was in prime condition. The skating rink was crowded afternoon and evening with persons seeking the enjoyment of the invigorating exercise. In the evening Mr. E. J. Hartle kindly gave an exhibition of fancy skating.

Received this week at Turnbull's, a choice lot of Scotch, Irish and Canadian Tweeds. Parties buying suits are well pleased with the price, and delighted with the fit.

Firemen's Ball.

On New Year's eve the firemen held their annual assembly in their rooms over the Fire Hall. A large company spent a delightful few hours in the dance, to the music of the Fire Brigade Band orchestra. Chief Rutherford selected the hour of midnight to baptize the elegant silver pitcher presented the Brigade by Mr. W. A. Sanderson, for services rendered at the time of the fire in his premises. The Darcy House supplied the excellent supper provided. Owing to the smallness of the hall in which the assembly was held, the firemen regret that they were not able to issue a larger number of invitations. However, all that were present were delighted with the manner in which the boys of the Brigade extended their hospitalities.

Complimentry Notice.

Our government can no longer be said to be an experiment. One hundred years of successful existence have established it as a permanent institution. The magnificent conduct of the people during the late election proves their patriotism, and the wisdom of our constitution. Our immense commercial interests also furnish convincing proof. We know of no better illustration of the success attending honorable and able business methods than the firm of D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich., the leading seedsman of this country. From small beginnings, thirty years ago, they have built up their mammoth business by strict adherence to their initial principle of furnishing only the best seeds obtainable. They offer to send their valuable "Annual" free to all who expect to buy seeds or bulbs.

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS.

The Result of Monday's Voting.

It is a long time since a municipal contest passed in Peterborough as quietly as that of the elections of 1885, the Mayor and the councillors of No. 3 ward being returned by acclamation. There were, however, sharp ward contests in No. 4 and No. 1, in the latter especially, where a local question gave odor, if not spice, to the struggle. The following are the results of the balloting, the three highest figures representing the members elect:—

NUMBER ONE WARD.—T. Cahill, 187; R. S. Davidson, 187; John McNaughton, 187; A. McNeil, 143; Wm. Montgomery (not a candidate) 36.

NUMBER TWO WARD.—R. H. Green, 231; Thos. Kelly, 199; John McClelland, 203; Wm. Mills, 149.

NUMBER FOUR WARD.—James Kendry, 131; J. J. Hartley, 103; Thos. Menzies, 95; Frank Mason, 93.

At the conclusion of the polling and the announcement of the returns, a number of ratepayers assembled in the Council Chamber, and Mr. Robt. Weir being appointed to the chair, short addresses were made by Messrs. Cahill, Hartley, McNaughton, R. H. Green and Wm. Mills.

There is but little change in the composition of the council of 1885. It is to be regretted that Mr. M. Millar, in view of the ripe experience and sound judgment he brought to the council board should have seen fit to retire. The new council is composed of shrewd business men, and it will not be the fault of their ability if the affairs of the town are not wisely and economically managed. If they will apply to the public business the same principles of energy, vigilance, and economy that have contributed to their personal success, we need have no fear of the result.

ASHBURNHAM.—Reeve, Mr. John Burnham, by acclamation. The vote for councillors was; W. Wand, 99; John Smith, 99; H. Calcutt, 84; R. Mowry, 75; Wm. Mills, 52; C. Brealy 47.

GALWAY.—Reeve, M. Mansfield. Councillors, Messrs. Doughtry, Molyneux, Allen and Lambert.

LAKEFIELD.—Reeve, R. C. Strickland. Councillors, Messrs. Cox, Ibster, Moore and McWilliams.

SOUTH MONAGHAN.—Reeve, Wm. Riddell. Councillors, Lewis Byers, Robert Nurse, David Baxter, Wm. Dawson.

ENNISMORE.—Reeve, Mr. John Crough, by acclamation. Councillors, Messrs. John Galvin, John Donoghue, Samuel Killen, John Nurse.

ASPHODEL.—Reeve, J. P. Brown; Deputy-Reeve, James Stephenson. Councillors, Messrs. Elliott, Fitzpatrick and Lynch.

BURLEIGH, ETC.—Reeve, F. Elmhirst, elected by a majority of 41 over his opponent, James Golborne. Councillors, Messrs. J. Scott, R. Spencer, Isaac Lean, and D. Whitmore.

Entertainment.

Another of those popular entertainments, which have been so successful, will be held in St. Luke's school room, Ashburnham, on Monday evening next, the 12th inst., at 8 o'clock. An excellent programme of songs, readings and vocal and instrumental music has been provided. Admission ten cents.

Promotion Examination

From Miss Johnston's room, to Miss Mathew's, in the Central School. Willie Armstrong, Willie Brundrett, Rupy Bradburn, Fred Braden, Nellie Brown, Harry Dredge, Milliar Hunter, Harold Jewett, Mabel Johnston, Emily Jackson, Carrie King, Thomas Lee, Eddy Lush, Willie Langford, Sophie Mitchell, Minnie Preston, Willie Roadhouse, James Ross, Ernie Rutherford, Tommy Robinson, A. Smart.

Business Change

We are glad to notice that Mrs. J. A. Mercer has taken into partnership, in the business of merchant tailoring, Mr. Andrew Mercer. The firm will hereafter be known as A. Mercer & Co. Mr. Mercer is well known in connection with the business as a young gentleman of good business abilities, personally popular, and we have no doubt that, with his directer connection with the business it will, as we cordially wish, go on with increased prosperity.

Farmers Attention.

Farmers and other owners of horses will be pleased to know that Mr. John Venard of Maregno, Ill., is at the Snowden House for a month or six weeks for the purpose of treating the general diseases of the horse, including the radical and rapid cure of ringbones, spavins, curbs and splints. He has had great success in this district, and references as to his skill and success may be made to Councillors Boyd and Toole, and Joseph Bradley and Thos. Calvert, Omemee, Wm. Taylor, Reeve of Carden and Dalton, and others.

Thanks.

The carrier boys of THE EXAMINER wish to cordially thank our patrons for the liberal reception they met on New Year's day. Some time since we abolished the custom of requiring the carrier boys to give an annual supper to the staff of the paper, believing that the boys should have the full benefit of the gratuities received by them on the presentation of their address. It seems much more reasonable and fair to give the carrier boys the full benefit of what they richly earn, than to spend their "pie" in an unnecessary gobble and guzzle of food and drink.

A Dramatic Treat.

The play-going public of Peterborough will be delighted to learn that Mr. Manager Bradburn has made arrangements for the appearance in the Opera House, on Wednesday and Thursday nights, Jan. 7th and 8th, of the great tragic star, Daniel E. Bandmann, supported by the beautiful and talented artiste Mlle. Louise Beaudet, and a first-class company from the leading New York theatres. Wherever he and his company have appeared in Canada they have scored remarkable successes, and the press is exceedingly complimentary in its commendations of the performances. * * The Montreal Gazette says:—"Last Saturday night Mr. Bandmann closed his two weeks' successful season at the Royal with "Richard III." The house was packed, and at the end of the 4th act Mr. Bandmann was called before the curtain." * * The Ottawa Free Press has this striking eulogy:—"A more perfect performance than last night's Othello can hardly be conceived. The house was well filled and the audience most enthusiastic. Mr. Bandmann's Othello was a masterly piece of acting, and he carried his audience with him from beginning to end." * * The Toronto Mail adds its quota of praise, thus:—"A large audience attended the Grand Opera House last evening, when Mr. D. E. Bandmann appeared. Mr. Bandmann certainly improved upon acquaintance. Each succeeding role in which he has appeared has made a more favorable impression than the preceding one, and it must now be confessed that he stands in the front rank of present day tragedians. Last evening he was repeatedly applauded, and was on more than one occasion called before the curtain. The play was well presented, the costumes being handsome and the appointments complete." * * At the Opera House, on Wednesday and Thursday nights. Reserved seat tickets at Hartley's, Hunter street.

FURNITURE IN POETRY, OR D. BELLEGHEM TO THE FROST.

Good patrons, busy times are past, and I breathe free once more;
Thanks I return to one and all that purchased from my store.
While every branch of business became I will not lag behind,
While I possess two skilful hands, and bright genial mind.
Throughout the festive days just past, had you been standing near
And watched my extensive sale of goods, as quick they disappear.
As water rush from mountain side, when spring melts winter's snow,
So from my store, load after load, in quick succession go.
But do not think I am sold out and left with empty hands;
My ware-rooms are again refilled—yes—equally as grand.
From the best firms my stock is bought, in style and beauty rare;
Their rich designs, artistic taste, would fairly make you stare;
My home-made stock can't be surpassed and small the share as good,
First-class mechanics I employ, and sound, well-seasoned wood.
My Tables and my Writing Desks will suit you like a charm,
The Table will delight your wife, the Desk support your aim;
Bureaus and Wash-Stands I prepare in sizes large and small,
I guarantee them in hot rooms—they won't in pieces fall.
Delightful Sideboards still on hand to hold your rich attire,
On top a Glass and Crockery Stand where friends may them admire;
Mattresses, bed-steads fixed with springs, strong, beautiful and nice,
One night on them would make you feel as if in Paradise;
Each joint and mortice fits so close, and tight together goes,
The bug will find no place to breed, far less stick in his nose.
Fine Easy Chairs, in every style, to move around the weak;
They suit the lazy and the lame, the feeble and the sick;
Nice Baby Chairs, with rockers on, and high ones you can draw
Up to your table, where your child can eat with its papa.
Rich Dressing Cases—every style—with Mirrors large as life.
To brush and dress from head to foot, the husband or the wife.
Young tony gent's may trim moustache—from boots to necktie view;
Sweet miss may prim and twist and dress, to fascinate her beau.
While furnishing your dining-room, please do give me a call,
My tables bear their smoking loads, and neither cringe nor fall.
If company is small, or large, you simply take your hand,
Arrange your table just to suit—contract it or expand.
My parlor sets, I can't describe their elegant design;
Spring Sofas, Centre Tables, Chairs and What-nots dazzling shine;
Black Hair Cloth Sets, and Crimson, too, Blue, Yellow, tinged with Green.
One set of those placed round your room, you might admit the Queen.
To name the half I have for sale takes too much space and time;
To make large sales more profit yield than naming them in rhyme.
If you think I incline to puff, or soar on fancy's flight,
Call in and see my brilliant show, by the clear electric light,
By selling cheap, material good, I ascribe my great success,
My customers' repeated calls prove they think nothing less.
When once they purchase in my Store they surely come again.
Come—I will suit your various wants with pleasure, and remain,

Yours truly,
D. BELLEGHEM.

Astonishing news, yet true, that White and Gray Cottons are cheaper than ever at Turnbull's.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Benjamin Brown, formerly of Peterborough, now a resident of Wyandotte, Michigan, is in town visiting friends.

Miss J. Ellsworth and Miss E. Keele, pupils of the Peterborough Collegiate Institute, were at the late examinations, admitted to the classes of the Freshmen year in Victoria University, Cobourg.

A pleasing acknowledgment of the geniality and good-fellowship of Mr. R. W. Grubb, teller of the Bank of Toronto, here, was made by his fellow clerks in their presentation to him of a beautiful New Year's gift. Customers of the bank will agree that the recognition was in every way well deserved.

From an Idaho (U. S.) we learn good news of Mr. T. J. Bates, a former resident of Peterborough, at one time an operator in the Montreal telegraph office here when it was in charge of Mr. Fairbairn. Having occupied the position of train despatcher at Weiser, he has been made day operator at Huntington. The Weiser Leader says:—"Tom is a perfect gentleman, being kind and courteous to all, making many friends during his stay here. We wish him abundant success, and hope that his stay at Huntington may be both pleasant and profitable."

Safe Insurance Business.

We call the attention of parties interested to the insurance advertisement of Mr. W. H. Hill in another column. In addition to representing thoroughly first class fire and life companies, Mr. Hill's long experience in the business, and pleasant mode of dealing specially commend him and his business to the public. Office Water Street, Crown Timber office.

Spelling Reform.

The second lecture of the Peterborough Y. M.C.A. course, will be given on the evening of Thursday, 15th January, in the association hall. The lecturer is Mr. J. H. Long, and the subject is "English Writing Reform," a topic of considerable interest, in view of the many schemes proposed for simplifying our orthography. We understand that Mr. Long, will, in connection with this subject, take up the origin and development of shorthand. The public generally are invited to attend.

Lecture on Infidelity.

On Sunday, February 1st, Rev. Dr. Sexton, an English Congregational minister, who is at present making a tour of America, will preach in the Baptist church, and also deliver a course of three lectures—on February 2nd, 3rd and 4th, on the subject of "Infidelity." The rev. gentleman is thoroughly at home in the discussion of the subject; he successfully combats the arguments of the unbelievers, and disposes of the objections of scepticism and infidelity in all their forms.

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral.

No other complaints are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs: none so trifled with by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured.

"In 1857 I took a severe cold, which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded me the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continued use of the PECTORAL a permanent cure was effected. I am now 62 years old, hale and hearty, and am satisfied your CHERRY PECTORAL saved me.
HORACE FAIRBROTHER."
Rockingham, Vt., July 15, 1882.

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.

"While in the country last winter my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with croup; it seemed as if he would die from strangulation. One of the family suggested the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was tried in small and frequent doses, and to our delight in less than half an hour the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the CHERRY PECTORAL had saved my darling's life. Can you wonder at our gratitude? Sincerely yours,
MRS. EMMA GEDNEY."
139 West 128th St., New York, May 16, 1882.

"I have used AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL in my family for several years, and do not hesitate to pronounce it the most effectual remedy for coughs and colds we have ever tried.
A. J. CRANE."
Lake Crystal, Minn., March 13, 1882.

"I suffered for eight years from Bronchitis, and after trying many remedies with no success, I was cured by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. JOSEPH WALDEN."
Byhalia, Miss., April 5, 1882.

"I cannot say enough in praise of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, believing as I do that but for its use I should long since have died from lung troubles. E. BRAGDON."
Palestine, Texas, April 22, 1882.

No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and it will always cure when the disease is not already beyond the control of medicine.

Peterborough House Furnishing Store!

We take this opportunity of letting the general public know of our establishment. People are calling upon us from time to time, enquiring whether this is the CHEAP STORE. One lady enquiring if this is the place where they sell things at half price. Others say, after having purchased elsewhere, if I had only knew of your establishment, I would have done otherwise. These are only some of the kind of expressions used about our business. While we believe a good business fairly and properly conducted, will advertise itself, we also think it necessary to let the public clearly see where we are and what we are doing, by the use of printer's ink. We do not know of losing a single customer after having once secured them, except in cases where we have been injudicious enough to trust unprincipled persons, they have cheated us and left us, we do not wish the custom of such. We would now just say stranger friend, when you are told by some kind friend to ~~go~~ to the House Furnishing Store, do not fail to do so.

TAKING STOCK!

No duty devolving upon the business man is so pertinent as that of Taking Stock. Books have been called the merchant's repeating clock, to tell him how he goes on. By "Taking Stock" and a comparison with his books, the trader is enabled to arrive at a reasonable computation of the business done during the year, and to tell whether the balance on the pages of his ledger shall be for or against him. It is not only the recognized duty of the active tradesman to "take stock" of his goods, his trade, his custom, but of his competitors.

Just now it is the manifest duty of our citizens to "take stock" of our newly elected Town Councillors to see what are the indications as to the filling in of Spaulding's Bay.

The universal application of the rule is shown in the particularity with which young ladies 'take stock' of prospective matrimonial chances.

In short—tradition, business usage, custom, convenience, and other good and sufficient reasons all corroborate the advisability of "Taking Stock."

This is the month we "take stock," and the balance of our WINTER GOODS will now be cleared out AT COST.

THE MIDDLE STATE.

"Theodore" Reviews "Laicus."

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

SIR,—I beg to remind "Laicus" and the reader that, the question is not, "Is there an intermediate state?" but, "Is there a third place called purgatory in that state? Our appeal for the settlement of the question must be, not to councils and the fathers, but, to the Scriptures. We are Christians, and to be consistent our belief must be regulated by strictly Christian teaching and authority—the Word of God—and not by the example of either Jews or Greeks. That I have followed "Laicus" beyond the limit of Scripture, was not that I value the testimony of those outside witnesses, but to leave him without excuse, and to which he has attempted to practice on the credulous.

In previous letters I have shown that Christ, who knew best, and who ought to be received as the supreme authority by all Christians, tells us, Luke xvi., of only two places for souls after death—one of happiness for the good, and one of torment for the bad—the great gulf between them forbidding all intercourse, and showing that there was no reformation possible for any one, and that, as souls entered so they must remain. There was no third place with Christ. That he spoke of only two places was no surprise to the Jews, who knew of two places only, and no purification in any of them for any one. Josephus, who lived at the time of the apostles, gives us full and conclusive testimony as to the belief of his people at the time, in his "Dissertation on Hades." To nullify this testimony the Talmud has been produced, but it is only five hundred years too late. It belongs to the 6th century, and can no more be received to establish the Jewish belief concerning Hades in the first century, than the decrees of Gregory the Great can be admitted to establish the belief of Timothy or John. The reader has sense enough to decide whether a witness who lived at the time of which he testifies, or one rising 500 years thereafter is the more trustworthy.

I have also shown that the apostles, whowere all of them brought up in the Jewish faith, when they became Christians and taught and wrote, although dealing again and again with subjects such as death, resurrection, judgment, heaven, hell, eternity, the sanctification of the believer, and the punishment of the wicked—subjects which must necessarily have led them to speak of a third place if it had existed—and the canon of the New Testament closed without one word from an inspired pen about any receptacle for souls, but hell for the wicked and heaven for the righteous. With them the complete sanctification of the soul was by God's remedy for sin—the "blood of atonement, the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost," and with them "to be absent from the body was to be present with the Lord." Now, on the supposition that these, and the first converts, were, before conversion, believers in purgatory, how can the change be accounted for, but on the ground that purgatory does not belong to Christianity, and that the apostles and Jews when converted cast the thing behind them as unchristian. Proceeding to the time immediately after the apostles—from the superstitious custom of praying for the dead that obtained in the third century and from the liturgies that appeared in the fourth, I showed that, for four centuries, at least, no third place was known, and this is confirmed by the decree of the fourth Council of Carthage, held in 419, and which is against the notion of purgatory, and on the ground that a third place between heaven and hell is inconceivable.

All these arguments "Laicus"

HAS CAREFULLY AVOIDED,

and for a good reason—he simply could not answer them, and we proclaim his failure. The canonicity of Maccabees was a strong point with "Laicus," but driven out of his position by irresistible and overwhelming facts, I see he gives it up, and pleads as an excuse for the failure of his unprincipled conduct that it "was not insisted on." But what did he mean by uttering all those forgeries in support of it if he was not insisting on it? I fear if he had tendered as much spurious paper in a business transaction, the excuse "that he was not insisting on it" would not keep him out of the penitentiary. And, although he has had opportunity, he has not attempted to deny the charge, nor to offer an excuse for the obliquity of the act; facts these, which tell us that the thing was not done unwittingly, and that the only regret he has got in the matter is that he did not succeed in deceiving us. Another failure.

That my second test, namely, "the unanimous consent of the fathers necessary to the interpretation of Scripture," is a valid one he has been compelled to admit, and unable to save himself from the consequences of the admission, he tries to mystify the reader, that his defeat may not appear too ignominious. With a good deal of blustering emphasis he affirms more than once that the unanimity required among the fathers is whatever that may mean. When three or half a dozen flatly contradict one another on any subject, what the "moral unanimous consent" among them means I am sure I have not the remotest idea, unless it be an agreement to keep up the contradiction. But a case more to the point. Paul, in 1. Cor., iii. 13, tells us of a fire that shall try every man's work. One set of fathers say that the fire here, "means the tribulations and trials of this life;" another set say that the fire means "the general conflagration at the last judgment;" a third batch affirm that "it signifies the unquenchable fire of hell." Here we have disagreement and contradiction, but Laicus solemnly assures us that we are not to look at them, but at the required "moral unanimous consent" which lies beneath them, and which means purgatory. But how does purgatory get either into the subject, or out of it for not one of the contending parties makes the remotest reference to such a place? Easily enough; only put the whole contradiction into a lottery bag, remembering that is all about fire—no matter about the double bottom—and let infallibility draw, and the the thing is done,—purgatory turns up. Well, that may

"NOT ABSOLUTE, BUT MORAL,"

DO FOR THOSE WILLING TO BE DUPED,

but in the name of common sense, let us in future be spared such balderdash. Another failure for Laicus.

In his letter of Dec. 11th I find him calling purgatory a "divinely revealed doctrine," which, of course, means that it has the authority of the divine word. Expecting to get Scripture for this statement, in my leiter of the following week I asked, by whose authority purgatory, the third place for souls, was opened? and further, by whose authority souls were doomed to go there at all? and again, on whose authority, works—the prayers and payments of the living—are in purgatory made available for what, the Scriptures say, grace only can cause? But I have got no answer, so that this "divinely revealed doctrine" has turned out to have so little divinity about it that it cannot be put into utterance, and the boasted title has proved to be a sham.

NOT A WORD OF SCRIPTURE AUTHORITY

for opening it, or sending souls there, or making prayers and masses and payments available for souls, that can be produced, yet it must be paraded before the ignorant as a divine institution. Can barefaced, impudent assumption go farther? Another failure for Laicus. In the same letter I asked the Scripture authority for the distinction between "venial and mortal sin." The answer is a characteristic one. Just what I expected. No fair, candid reply can be given, but an answer must be got, and it begins with a bold perversion of Scripture. The passage quoted is James i. 15,—"Then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin, and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death." This is changed into, "it is not slight sin, but sin completed that begetteth death." Where does Laicus get the word "slight?" It is not in the verse. The Bible knows no such word in connection with sin, and the addition is an outrageous fabrication imposed on the divine word and to make it speak what is not the mind of the Spirit. Does our adventurer know that God's word contains such a statement as he can read, Rev. xxii. 18.

TO PERVERT ITS MEANING,

But this fearless perverter of God's word can flounder a little, and, after all, cover himself with confusion. He grants that "the wages of sin is death." Now, any act we do must either be sin or not sin. There is no middle standing ground here, and the Word says "the wages of sin," whether small as a mote or large as a beam, of whatever character, whether greatly aggravated or less heinous —"is death"—No, no, says Laicus, there is a "slight kind of sin,"—a "little mixture of evil," whose wages is not death. That is exactly what Satan told Eve, but deluded woman, she found to her cost, that the sin was mortal, and Satan was a liar.

In the very next sentence he quotes from Matthew xii, 36, which says "that every idle word that man shall speak they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment." Now, what is a slight sin—a little mixture of evil—a slight defilement—if a trifling idle word is not? Laicus says those "slight sins" don't earn death, but are atoned for in purgatory, and so taken out of the way. But God says they abide and are to be accounted for in "the day of judgment," and adds, "For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

WHICH ARE WE TO BELIEVE,

God or Laicus? And if those slight things must still be accounted for at the judgment, what is the meaning or the use of suffering in purgatory? To endure in purgatory under the pretence of getting rid of them is a shame, and the money paid for useless masses and powerless prayers, is got under false pretences—a rather serious offence among men, but much more serious when it comes to be an offence before God, and a deception practised on souls.

On Rev. xxi, 27, which he quotes thus, "nothing defiled can enter heaven", this perverter of Scripture seems to centre all his remaining hope. He certainly ought to have gone a little further and taken in the clause, "neither whatsoever maketh a lie," and paused when he added slight to God's word, to make it tell what is not true. The sanctification of the soul cannot be accomplished by physical pains and penalties. It is a work of God, and amply provided for in God's arrangements for salvation. Man has no part in determining what is to be done or how it is to be done.

GOD ONLY IS SUFFICIENT

here. David had confidence in God's provision when he said, "The Lord will perfect that which concerneth me," Psalm 138, 8. And Paul had sufficient confidence in God's remedy when he told the Colossian church, Col. I 22, 28, that those "reconciled through Christ are presented holy, unblamable and unreprovable in God's sight," and that he laboured in the Gospel "to present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." And when he wrote to the Cornithians, II Cor., v, he had no fear of a failure on God's part, but was confident that the dissolution of the earthly house would be immediately followed by the possession of the heavenly, and that "to be absent from the body was to be present with the Lord."

Whatever defilement, slight or otherwise, might cling to him at the moment of death, God would take care of that, and he would not have to wait in purgatory but go directly to the Lord. To all that may be urged in reference to remaining "slight defilement" at death the believer has this abiding and all sufficient assurance, I John, i 7, ii, 1: "The blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son,

CLEANSETH US FROM ALL SIN," and if any man sin we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous." And the reader can determine for himself whether this assurance through Christ's blood and advocacy, is not more in accordance with the love and mercy and goodness of God than the cruel, unrelenting fires and pains of purgatory. More failures for Laicus. Several times my voluminous opponent has tried to soften down the horrors of purgatory by telling us that the torturing element was not material fire, but the "Catechism of Trent on the fifth article of the creed," flatly contradicts him, and tells us plainly that the purging medium is fire. It would be interesting to know how material fire can be applied to an immaterial soul. Holy character cannot be produced by the application of material torture the thing is absurd. Besides the most honored doctors of his church have taught that the location of purgatory is and that the fire there is that which purges souls. The torture is exquisite. Here is a sample taken from "St. Patrick's purgatory"

"There were numbers of men which no arithmetic can reckon up, lying on the ground, pierced through the body. They uttered hoarse cries of agony, their tongues cleaving to their jaws. They were baffeted by fierce tempests, and shattered by repeated blows of devils. The devils drove them into another plain, horrible with exquisite tortures. Some, with iron chains about their necks and limbs, were suspended over fires; others were burned with red-hot cinders. Not a few were transfixed with spits and roasted, melted metal being poured into them. Alas for those who do not penance in this world," &c. Not so bad a purgatory, and that, not for wicked, damned souls, but for those who die with "slight sin." Will any one compare this mode of removing "slight defilement" with God's plan of taking away all sin, namely, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world," and hesitate for a moment to choose, and to accept the latter.

With strange infatuation "Laicus" still that prayer for the dead teaches the existence of purgatory. In his letter of January 1st, top of second column, we read these words, "suffice it to briefly observe that masses—the sacrifices and oblations of Augustine and the early Christian fathers—are being constantly offered up throughout the Catholic world for the faithful departed, and without regard of payment for the service." It is true, then, that all the faithful departed since the days of Augustine are yet in purgatory? Truly Rome must either have lost the key or forgotten to be just. Surely those suffering since the days of Augustine must have been more than "slight sinners"—must have had more than a "little defilement" attached at death, when upwards of fourteen hundred years acquaintance with the "buffeting of devils," "the roasting of fire" and the searing of "red-hot cinders and melted metal" have not yet extracted the "utmost farthing."

Cruel, cruel Rome, to keep her faithful ones so long in torture, and her priests, not half fed or clad, groaning under the burden of so much ill-paid labour.

"Laicus" has evidently studied his adored Augustine so faithfully that he CANNOT KEEP FROM IMITATING HIM.

Even to the minutenes of sometimes writing nonsense, and more frequently pouring out contradictions, he keeps closely following his example. To complete the portrait he has only to go one step farther—apologise for his failures and write out a full list of "retractions."

I think it is Dean Swift that is responsible for saying that "narrow-minded souls are like narrow-necked bottles—the less that is in them the greater the noise in letting it out."

We have had a good illustration in "Laicus," and next time he appears I hope that, for his own sake he will be able to practice a little more modesty and show that he has done penance enough for his short-comings, and specially in connection with spurious paper and the perversion of the Scriptures. If I had not shown that there is no such place. I would have sent him to purgatory, but as it is, the next best thing must do—the remorse of his own conscience and the shame of failure.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for you courtesy throughout this correspondence, I subscribe myself, Your obliged,

THEODORE.

"Laicus" Reviews "Theodore."

To The Editor of THE EXAMINER:

Since our review of canonical objections to Machabees was cut short in our last letter, it is to be hoped that the insertion of the remainder, together with a brief and hasty summary, will not be denied us. And because your space is valuable and subject to other pressing demands, we will condense and minimize as much as possible:

Champion's "forgery" mill in full blast; one of those gifted mortals who know all about Catholic doctrine without ever having taking pains to study it; gets his "facts" from distorted portraits drawn by bitter enemies of catholicity; usual custom to vilify catholics; Rev. Nightingale, a Prot. clergyman, testifies (All Relig. p. 65.) that "in scarcely a single instance has a case concerning them been fairly stated, or the channels of history not grossly, not to say wickedly, corrupted"; thus testifies Wix, Dr. Parr, Grotious and other Protestant writers: will, doubtless, crowd all the bosh, sophistry and misrepresentation of all his letters into his last; picks out small portion of canon proof and garbles that unutterably; canon proof not requisite; ditto of signing provision; noticed only because insisted on; signing never denied by reason of Machabees—a strong evidence for these books; proofs accumulating from fathers and minor councils up to culmination at Trent, where certified by 255 fathers; no opposition to Trent on account of Machabees; every general council more or less resisted; such resistance as Trent met not of much moment, and speedily vanished; Carthage regular and undoubted; naked assertion alters not historic fact; Carthage but followed example of Hyppo; Austin present at both; said the church regarded Machabees canonical, and gave ample proof of same in T. iii. 1. ii. De Doct. Christ. Council Trullo 680, as by us stated; second synod Trullo—naught to do with Mach.—held 692, sure enough; signing puzzle twelve years out of date, and of champion too transparent; Basle, indeed, schismatical, condemned, and aside from question; adduced obviously as a dust blinder; Greek and Latin united at Florence; former held Machabees., and latter made no doubt or question of them—a negative evidence most positive in kind; Gelasius and 1st council Rome can stand against his bare assertion; Cresconius, African Christ. bishop, followed African precedents of Hyppo, Carthage and Austin; Isidore's testimony nowise connected with letter of Innocent to Exuperius, Bishop of Tonlouse; childish shaking of "Goleatus" at us changes not Jerome's declaration found in Lib. 2. Contra Rufinum; if he reject Machabees must reject also other books of admitted Scripture; has not dared, up to date, to defend his own lame canon; see controversed book in Euseb. H. E. l. iii., xxxv; he condemns the Apocrypha, and so good part of New Test.; again proves himself a vandal logician; he uses the knife, not reason; with the Scriptures of his forefathers; suits Scripture to matter, not matter to Scripture, as he ought; impossible to learn the incorrigible man anything; curses minority, wants majority rule; good! for Machabees, 222 million, Cath., 75 million. Greek, portion Jews; Contra 100 million Prot.; big majority for Machabees; same majority for purgatory; greater even for middle state, since thousands Protestants and myriads non-Christians are added thereto; practice, preach, etc.; possible cha ce his little "caucus"

DOES'T MONOPOLIZE ALL LIGHT,

truth and intelligence; has then his small minority "caucus" a right to "supersede the Jews?" three to one opposed to him on canon; by his own logic should go back to and stand by Hebrew canon: the "machine" is champion's pet, and haggles Scripture so as to build thereon 999 conflicting, ever-varying sects and doctrines; Episc. Bk com. prayer was put on Presbyterian, "Index Expurg.;" first gave Austin high praise, now rails and storms at him; Luther, Dr. Field, Dr. Conel, Prof. Bruckor, all "good, sound, etc.," give Austin highest laudation ever received by man since the time of Apostles; let reader judge for himself; mentioning church liturgy, says Austin (Serm. 159) "an injury to pray for a martyr," and teaches (De Civ. Dei. l. 20) church never prays for departed saints" along with "temporary purgation of small sins after death, in those who did not depart separated from Christ by any grievous sin." "Retractions" written to correct judgment; highly eulogised by every Christian scholar for doing the same; unlike champion did not think he knew everything, or that he was infallible; Christ taught penance Austin, (Serm. 392, C. 5.) teaches canonical penance, early church imposed the like; works of Austin evidently put through and punished by champion's unique "forgery" mill; not incredible means credible i. e. worthy of belief; twist and distort as he will Austin makes against and contradicts champion; every liturgical collection of Renandot—an orthodox R.C.—teaches purgatory, prayer for the dead, but never prayer for martyr or damned soul;—now, brief summary: found at outset "Believing in somethings written" in our first letter; those things such as not controverted, among others defilement passage and argument on a reason; he gave reason a wide berth all through; proved canon on him, though not necessary to contention; Machabees and Josephus show custom of Jews to pray for dead; Jews of to-day evidence the same; showed Christ

NEVER REBUKED THIS CUSTOM;

That in Tertullian's day—the time of Irenæus, disciple of Polycarp, who was a disciple of St. John—this "public practice" continued to flourish, and was carried down the ages by Jew and Christian; showed these prayers were alone addressed to souls in middle state, and that middle state and purgatory were precisely at one in purpose and locality; showed that all the fathers taught middle state and prayer for dead; showed that "unanimous consent" was moral, not absolute, applicable to doctrine, and not to each verse of Scripture; showed that he taught a heresy for which Tertullian was condemned, viz., that blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall never be forgiven; showed that purgatory was evidenced by Luther and Melancthon; proved purgatory by Scripture; Champion gave up points as to Tertullian and Origen's teaching before relapse; gave up that Austin was first father that "hinted at," etc.; Champion taught first Donatist heresy, namely, that early church was defiled—a heresy execrated by early fathers and councils; gave assertions only for that defilement; we gave proof contra; would have it nearer apostles' greater corruption, i.e., root rotten, but trunk and branches sound—a logic with a vengeance; he admitted limbus, but could not tell when it was abolished; never could tell us where purgatory was not "fitted up," etc; would also make inspiration self-destructive; prayed for souls in hell and heaven; either he would have Christ in hell of damned, or St. Peter a liar; would have episcopal belief in middle state a "huge imposture," and Dr. Johnson, as well as Judas, an idiot; turned Pusey and Taylor against him on middle state; showed Jews belief of pleasure and pain in limbus, just as happens in this world; showed belief of Jews and Greeks in purgatory; showed that not slight sin, but sin completed, i.e., mortal sin begetteth death; showed that he would damn the great majority of the human family; showed that he falsified Austin on Matt. xii., 32, as per De. Civ. l. xxi., c. 13; the like of Jerome on payment of last farthing (Com. in Cap. 5th Matt.); suggested naturally that he had treated other fathers in like manner; appealed to fathers, and when they beat him, cursed them with "conjectures, superatition," etc.; knew we would prove middle state on him, and so, just out of spite, cutely constructed for himself "a heaven for calves" by "book of Exodus," in which abode he, doubtless, expects to meet all "those kind hearts" and soft heads who "prayed for souls in hell and heaven"; God only knows what nonsensical thing he has not said or done during the course of middle state discussion; think he will do exceedingly well

A parting word: writer, a young Catholic layman, never made study of philosophy or theology; takes little credit for routing such a champion; event shows strength of writer's cause, and what one might do who had made requisite studies; miss our guess widely if we have not been pitted against a full-fledged parson; performed our task, every iota, alone and unaided; wish increased prosperity to the excellent EXAMINER; heartiest thanks to Editor and reader; charity and commiseration for oracular "Theodore." Sine die, 'gainst choice, but from necessity.

LAICUS.

Tempted by Sharpers.

"It is a great wonder to me that the number of defalcations by treasurers of corporations is not larger than it is," observed a treasurer of one of the counties of Maryland to a Baltimore American reporter, while speaking of the recent failures.

"Why?"

"Because they have so many temptations. When I first took hold of the treasurership of our county I was literally beseiged with letters, circulars, and confidential communications from New York banking firms of doubtful notoriety. They came in every mail. They were marked 'private,' 'personal,' and all that sort of thing. They proved to me—on paper, of course—how I could easily double all investments. They showed that by putting my money up I was absolutely certain to win, and that it was an impossibility for me to lose. These communications were full of the most plausible methods. The plans were captivating. The results they worked out were astoundingly big and there was an air of frankness about them which would ordinarily disabuse the unsophisticated mind of any suspicion of crookedness. For nearly two years these things kept coming to my office, but as I did not bite at the hook they gradually fell off, and now I get very few of them. But I do know this to be the case—whenever a new man is put in a place where he has other people's money to handle, these sharpers in the big cities get after him with their circulars, and when they once get hold of him they don't let go until they have made him a thief or a bankrupt, or both. That is why I am surprised that the number of defalcations is not larger."

WIT AND HUMOR.

"Ah, wasteful woman! she who may
On her sweet self set her own price,
Knowing he cannot choose but pay—
How she has cheapen'd Paradise!
How given for naught her priceless gift,
How spoiled the bread and spilled the wine,
Which, spent with due, respective thrift,
Had made brute men, and men divine."

RECRUITS FOR KING JESUS.

"And there came of the children of Benjamin and Judah to the hold unto David. And David went out to meet them, and answered and said unto them 'If ye be come peaceably unto me to help me, mine heart shall be knit unto you: but if ye be come to betray me to mine enemies, seeing there is no wrong in mine hands, the God of our fathers look thereon, and rebuke it.' Then the spirit came upon Amasai, who was the chief of the captains, and he said, 'Thine are we, David, and on thy side, thou son of Jesse: peace, peace be unto thee, and peace be to thine helpers; for thy God helpeth thee.' Then David received them, and made them captains of the band." 1 Chronicles, xii., 16–18.

At this time David was in the hold—I suppose in the stronghold of Ziklag, which the king of the Philistines had given him. It was in that fortress-town that he received a welcome addition to his band. David was an exile; and it is not every man who cares to cast in his lot with a banished nobleman. He was outlawed, and his sovereign would have slain him with his own hand if he had found opportunity: few care to stake their all with a man in such a condition. The many who were on Saul's side spoke very bitterly of David, and, wishing to curry favour with the king, they slandered him to the blackest degree; few respectable people care to associate themselves with a person who is in ill-repute. Many to whom he had done no ill were eager to betray David, and sell him into the hand of his enemy; for men sought their own gain, and cared not whom they sold, so long as they clutched the price: it was no small thing for a band of men to unite with a man upon whose head a price was set. David had to stand upon his guard, for traitors were all around; the men of Keilah would have delivered him up when he went in all simplicity of heart within their gates. The fortunes of David were at a low ebb, and hence when these men came to David they did a valorous action—an action which he would be sure to remember in the after-days of his triumph.

I want to run a parallel between the case of David and that of our Lord Jesus Christ. At the present moment our Lord Jesus, the Son of David, is still in the hold. Among the men of this world he is not yet enthroned: their hearts go after another prince, and as yet the kingdom has not come to the Son of David. I know that He reigns in heaven, and that He is in very deed King of kings and Lord of lords; but before the eyes of the mass of men he is still despised and rejected. His people, as yet are but a feeble folk, and often hard put to it; while His kingdom is ridiculed, His claims are derided, and His yoke is scorned. The doctrines which He preached are tossed to and fro like a ball; and men at the present time are glorying in science or tradition, in reason or in speculation; yea, they speak as if human wisdom would soon wipe out the very name of Christianity. It is not so in truth before God; but it is so in appearance before men. This is an age of blasphemy and rebuke for our Lord the King. Brave are they who will stand to Christ in this, the day of His exile. They shall be right royally rewarded who will now take up His cause, and will go forth to Him without the camp, bearing His reproach. He is the man for the Lord Jesus who can now run the gauntlet of miles of scoffers, and be willing to be called a fool, a madman, or an idiot for His name's sake. For my own part, I never loved my Lord better than now that He is defamed; and His truth is all the dearer to me because it is flouted by the worldly wise.

It is to those who will volunteer for Jesus that I am about to speak; and our first head is, that using the text as a parable we have here a commendable example. It is a commendable example for men to join themselves with Christ while he is at a discount. Secondly, here is a cautious inquiry. When David sees these men come he does not at once receive them with open arms, but there is a reserve about him till he has asked them a question or two. He wants to know who they are before he writes down their names in his muster-roll. And, thirdly, here is a very cordial enlistment as they answer to his question, and say, "Thine are we, David, and on thy side, thou son of Jesse; for thy God helpeth thee."

I. First, then, here is A VERY COMMENDABLE EXAMPLE. May the Holy Spirit lead many of my dear hearers to follow it.

Many of these men of Benjamin and Judah, in the first place, went to join themselves to David because they had heard that he was the Lord's anointed. They understood that Samuel had gone down to Ramah, and, in the days of David's youth had anointed him in the name of the Lord to be king instead of Saul. Therefore they said, "Whom God anoints we will follow," and they came after David. It was fit that they should be loyal to David if they would be obedient to God.

Next, these men, no doubt many of them, followed David because of his personal excellencies. They had heard of him—of what he was in his youth, what he had been at home, and at court, and in the army, and in the day of battle. He had behaved admirably everywhere, and these warriors had heard of it. I should not wonder if some of them remembered that, when he was a youth and ruddy, he came forth with his sling and stone and smote the giant foe of Israel on the forehead. Perhaps they had heard of all his mighty acts that he did when, as Saul's captain, he went in and out before the host and did valiantly in the name of the Most High. And when they heard of his gentleness, and of his courtesy, and of all the many virtues which adorned him, making him so greatly different from those leaders of freebooting bands who were so common in that land, I do not wonder if they enthusiastically gave themselves up to be the loyal followers of him who was the son of Jesse. A good soldier should have a good captain: a good captain deserves good soldiers. These men of war argued well when they enlisted under David. But how shall I commend the Lord Jesus Christ to you that are of a noble spirit? Was there ever any like unto Him? Who among the good, the great, the brave, the beautiful, can be likened unto Him? He left the courts of heaven that He might save men. Love brought him from glory to be the Redeemer of His enemies! Being found in fashion as a man, He gave Himself up to death, even the death of the cross for love of men. All His life long He did valiantly for the Lord His God, in all holiness and righteousness, defeating every temptation and overcoming all evil, and He ended His labour by going up to the cross to enter into personal duel with death and hell, therein overthrowing all the powers of evil on the behalf of His people. Oh, could I paint His face, and could you see it as it is beheld by the eyes of God, you would all be enamoured of Him! Oh, could all men know how good He is, how gracious He is, as some of us do know; even if they only went to that partial extent, surely no men would stand out, but the Prince Immanuel would win all hearts! All these young men and all the vast multitude who gather to this Tabernacle would gladly take up their cross, and follow after Jesus at once, if they had any idea of his surpassing excellence. O my soul, how wouldst thou rejoice if men would come at once to Jesus! Oh to hear you all say, "We also will be with Jesus in the day of His derision and His scorn; for we see what He is, and there is none like Him. He shall be our King and our Captain, for He is the chief among ten thousand, and the altogether lovely." He, being such a One, and so worthy of the anointing which He has received of God, I do as His recruiting sergeant commend Him to every one here. Oh, that you would all become His true followers at once; for He deserves the love and loyalty of every one of you. If ye would be safe and happy, come to my Lord, and be henceforth His servants. If ye would fight a good fight, enlist beneath this glorious "Captain of our salvation."

Sadly true is it that the Lord Jesus Christ is still of so little account in this world. His name, ah, I am sick of the way in which they use his name to-day! Shame on some that are called Christian ministers! They believe in Christ, but it is a Christ without his crown, his atonement, his judgment seat, or even his Godhead. They mock us with orthodox phrases, from which the essential truth is gone. They pretend that they believe in the atonement, and when we listen to their atonement we find that it does not effectually atone for any one. It is a mere fiction, and not a fact. It saves nobody, but is a mere sham. They have eviscerated the gospel, and then they hold up the empty carcase, and claim that they are Christians still. Christians who have murdered Christianity! Believers who doubt whether there is anything to be believed! Yet we are entreated in our charity to hug such traitors to our bosom. We shall do nothing of the kind. We would sooner believe in infidels outright than in those who pretend to be Christians and are infidels at heart. "Modern thought" is a more evil thing than downright atheism; even as a wolf in a sheep's skin is worse than a wolf in his natural form. There are pretty things said of our Lord Jesus by those who deny the faith which are sickening to me. I loathe to hear our true Lord praised by false lips. They deny the doctrines which he taught, and yet prate about believing Him. It is a shallow trick, but yet it deceives shallow souls. Poor, weak minds say, "The man speaks so beautifully of Jesus, surely he cannot be in error." I tell you it is the old Judas trick—the Son of man is betrayed with a kiss. How nauseating their praises must be to Him whom they are betraying.

Once more. These men came to David because they believed that David had a great future before him. He was very poor when they came to him, an exile, as we have said, an outlaw, one who could not return to his land because the king himself had a personal feud with him. But they said, "It doth not yet appear what he shall be. This son of Jesse will be king yet, and his enemies shall beg their lives of him." So, looking to the great future that awaited him, they determined to take shares with him in his present low estate that they might be raised with him in his exaltation. Now, I think that I can say to every one here, "I would that ye would come over to David's side—to Jesus's side—for there is a future awaiting Him, a glory, a triumph, even here on earth, such as shall make those men gnash their teeth who throw away this opportunity of enlisting in his host." How will souls lament for ever their neglect of joining themselves to Jesus! It shall be their everlasting regret that they lost the opportunity of standing straight out for truth, and right, and love, as they are seen in the person of the Son of God. Oh, it will be an endless loss to have refused to stand upon the pillory of scorn, and avow Jesus of Nazareth as the Son of God, and the Saviour of men. "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see Him." Woe to those who pierced him by refusing to believe in Him. The Lord shall reign for ever and ever, and the shout of "Hallelujah, hallelujah," shall come up from earth and descend from heaven. He shall sit upon the throne of his father David, and of his kingdom there shall be no end. Who does not desire to be with Him and to behold His glory? Cast in your lot with Him, then, O ye undecided! Let his cause be as it may in the eyes of worldlings, espouse it at once right heartily; for they that are with Him in His humiliation shall be with Him in His triumph.

Those are the reasons why, at this time, I stand here, and exhort, beg, beseech, entreat every one among you to be on the side of Jesus Christ our Lord. Woe unto you if you turn your backs upon Him! Woe unto you if you attempt to be neutrals! Woe unto you if you are lukewarm followers! Remember, he that is not with Him is against Him. He that takes not up his cross and follows not after Him is not worthy of Him, and shall not be counted among His disciples. Oh, that this whole company here to-night were distinctly and avowedly, perfectly and continously, on the side of Jesus Christ, the Prince of peace, the coming King! O my friend, yonder, I speak to you personally, I would to God that you would at once put on the livery of my Lord Jesus, and become His sworn servant for ever!

II. Now, I have just a few words to say upon the second head. A CAUTIOUS INQUIRY.

These men of Benjamin and of Judah came to David, and David met them as a warrior standing upon his guard. The times were not such as to allow of a negligent confidence in all who professed friendship. The Benjamites were of the same tribe as Saul, and it was singular that they should come and join with David, the rival of their own leader. The men of Judah belonged to the same tribe as those men of Keilah who had betrayed David: therefore the hero was cautious and made careful inquiry. My Lord Jesus Christ is never so eager after disciples as to enrole those who cannot bear to be questioned. He did not go abroad sweeping up a heap of nominal followers who would increase his apparent strength and prove a real weakness to Him. He said to those who offered themselves, "Count the cost." "Lord, I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest," says one. Jesus does not there and then enlist him, but calmly replies, "Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." He wants followers, but he wants them to be of the right kind; therefore he does not delude them and excite them to enter suddenly upon a course which they will, before long, renounce.

Then David puts the question, "If ye be come peaceably unto me," and this was needful, for some are captious and quarrelsome. Some profess to come to Christ, but they quarrel with Christ at the very first. They would make terms with him, and they come intending to dispute with His people. From the first they are discontented and fault-finding, rather patronizing Christ and his cause than humbly uniting with Him and His people. They do not think half so much of God's people as God thinks of them. When I hear people say, "Oh, there is so-and-so, who is not what he ought to be, and he is a member of the church," and then they begin finding fault with this and with that, I say to myself, "That critic is no true friend." The church is not perfect, but woe to the man who finds pleasure in pointing out her imperfections. Christ loved his church, and let us do the same. I have no doubt that the Lord can see more fault in His church than I can; and I have equal confidence that he sees no fault at all, because He covers her faults with His own love—that love which hides a multitude of sins; and He removes all her defilement with that precious blood which washes away all the transgressions of His people. I dare not find fault with those whom the Lord has loved from before the foundation of the world; more especially since I find that I need all my time to find out my own faults and to get rid of them. If you are a faultless man I do not ask you to join the Christian church, because I am sure that you would not find anybody else there like yourself. It is true that if you do not join a church till you find a perfect one, you will not be a church member this side of heaven; but I may add, that if there was such a church, the moment your name was written in the list it would leave off being a perfect church, for your presence would have destroyed its perfection. If you are coming to pick holes, and quiz, and question, and find fault, and talk about inconsistencies and so forth, then you may pass on and join some other army; but if you be come peaceably to our Lord and to us, then I offer you a hearty welcome. We are not anxious to enlist men who love to have the pre-eminence, nor men of fierce temper, nor unforgiving spirits, nor proud, envious, lovers of strife: we want only those who have the mind of Christ. Come peaceably, or come not at all.

There are three questions, then. Do you come to Christ and accept Him? If so, come along. Do you come with a desire to maintain peace among your Christian brethren? If so, come! Do you come with the intent of helping the Lord Jesus Christ to spread abroad His truth? Then come, and welcome, and the Lord be with you and with us!

III. A CORDIAL ENLISTMENT. The captain of these brave men felt the Spirit come upon him, and he spoke up as warm-heartedly as David had spoken, saying, "Thine are we, David, and on thy side, thou son of Jesse: peace, peace, be unto thee, and peace be to thine helpers; for thy God helpeth thee."

He began thus:—"Thine are we, David." Now, that is the first thing I want of those who are going to join the church—"Thine are we, Jesus. We are not our own; we are bought with a price." Well may that man avow himself to belong to Christ who has been bought with the blood of Christ: "For ye are not redeemed with corruptible things, as with silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ." Now, if ye be indeed redeemed by Him, I pray you confess that you are altogether and absolutely your Lord's. Sing with your whole heart

"All that I am, and all I have Shall be forever thine."

Do not sing it alone, but practise it. Let your lives say—Thine are we, Jesus. Neither count anything that we possess to be our own; but all is dedicated to thy royal use.

Then Amasai added, "and on thy side, thou son of Jesse:" for, if we belong to Christ, of course we are on Christ's side, whatever that side may be. In religion, morals, politics, we are on Christ's side. Here is the side of the learned; there is the side of the ignorant. we are on neither the one nor the other: we are on Christ's side. In every political question we desire to be and ought to be on Christ's side; we are neither of this party nor of that, but on the side of justice, peace, righteousness. In every moral question we are bound to be on Christ's side. In every religious question we are not on the side of predominant thought, nor on the side of fashionable views, nor on the side of lucre, but on the side of Christ. Make this your oracle—"What would Jesus do?" Go and do that. How would Jesus think? Go and think that. What would Jesus have you be? Ask God to make you that. "Thine are we, David, and on thy side thou son of Jesse."

Then he added, "Peace be to thee." "Peace, peace, be to thee." Double peace to thee. So say we to our Lord Jesus Christ: our heart salutes Him and invokes peace upon Him. Blessed Master, we are at peace with Thee so completely as to be at one with Thee. What Thou sayest we believe; what Thou doest we admire; what Thou commandest we obey; what Thou claimest we resign; what Thou forbiddest we forego. We yield ourselves up to Thee wholly, and are at perfect peace with Thee in all thy purposes, and designs, and acts. Peace, peace, to Thee.

"And peace be to Thy helpers." We desire all good for all good men. We pray for the peace of the peaceful. The day that we were converted we felt that we loved every Christian. I used to say of the little village where I first preached, that I had such an attachment to every inhabitant in it that if I had seen a dog that came from Waterteach I would have given him a bone. Do you not feel the same towards all the Lord's people? The proverb hath it, "Love me, love my dog;" and when you love Christ you love the very lowest of His people. Ay, if Jesus had a dog, you would love that dog for Christ's sake. I am sure that it is so. When a man is always cavilling, I fear he has not the spirit of Christ, and is none of His. We know some people who might be compared to hedghogs, they cannot be touched by anybody, they are all spines and prickles; such people may think well of themselves, but it is to be feared that the loving Jesus does not think well of them.

The last word that they said to David was, "For thy God helpeth thee;" and I shall keep that last sentence very much to myself: I want to feed upon it as my portion of meat: you must not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn, and I am that ox at this time. "Thy God helpeth thee." How I do rejoice to think that God is helping the Great Son of David.

Cast in your lot with "the Leader and Commander of the people," who has God with Him. It is the glory of Christ's cause that the Lord God is involved in it. Mr. Wesley's dying words were, "The best of all is, God is with us!" As I repeat the truth my heart cries, "Hallelujah! Blessed be the name of the Lord!" The Lord Thy God helpeth Thee, O Christ of God! The pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in Thy hand. Thou must reign: Thy Father sweare it to Thee. Thou shalt divide a portion with the great, and Thou shalt share the spoil with the strong, for Thou hast given up Thy soul unto death, and permitted Thy glory to be rolled in the dust; and Thou hast risen and gone into the glory; therefore Thou must reign. O Anointed of the Lord, Thy throne shall endure for ever! To-night Thy servants salute Thee again, thou Son of David. Wounded Christ, we lay our fingers in the print of the nails, and say, "My Lord and my God." Risen Christ, we look upward as the heavens receive Thee, and we adore. Ascended Christ, we fall at Thy dear feet, and say, "Thine are we, O Son of David, anointed to be a Prince and a Saviour." Coming Christ, we wait and watch for Thine appearing! Come quickly to Thine own! Amen and amen.

THE ART INTERCHANGE,

The ART INTERCHANGE of December 4, 1884, has, as a double page supplement, one of the most exquisite studies in color ever published, entitled the "Lute Player." It shows the full length figure of a beautiful girl, with a lute in her hand, standing against a background of forest trees. The coloring is strong and brilliant, and the drawing is exceptionally good. The picture is well worth a frame. Besides this charming supplement there is a large sheet of designs in black and white. This contains a study of golden rod for panel decoration, and another study of the cardinal flower. An embroidery band is also a feature of this sheet of designs. This latter is a most attractive and novel pattern. The background is composed of disks resemembling a succession of small wheels, and on this is a leaf and nut design; the whole forming a striking design and one which when carried out either in embroidery and applique or in embroidery will be very effective. A design of a decorative head for brass work, a simple arrangement of daisies for decorating bon-bon cover; some geometric designs for tiling or for mosaic floor decoration, a novel design for nut plate and two strong reproductions of etchings, are among the other illustrations. A notable article is on CHURCH EMBROIDERY. This is the first of three or four articles on this subject which are to be fully illustrated. Editorially, some original views are advanced concerning one's duty to the poor. The NOTES, QUERIES, and ANSWERS department (a most valuable feature of this journal) contains information about painting in water colors, what is meant by painting "loosely," the use of varnish and turpentine, use of mediums, how to learn to draw, suggestions for designs for set of dinner plates and vegetable and meat dishes, drawing for reproduction by wood and photo engraving, tinting backgrounds in china painting, decoration for desert plates, Japanese bead curtains, house furnishing, list of mineral colors used in painting under and over the glaze. This very full and interesting copy of the Art Interchange can be had by enclosing 15 cents in stamps to William Whitlock, publisher, 140 Nassau Street, New York that Shaker Blood Syrup will cure everything but the fact that on the purity and vitality of the blood depends the vigour and health of the whole system, and that disease of various kinds is often only the sign that nature is trying to remove the disturbing cause, we are naturally led to the conclusion that a remedy that gives life and vigor to the blood, eradicates scrofula and other impurities from it, as Shaker Blood Syrup undoubtedly does, must be the means of preventing many diseases that would occur without its use; hence the field of its usefulness is quite an extended one, and we are warranted in recommending it for all derangements of the system which are caused by an unnatural state of the Blood.

We do not claim

Gentlemen—I was a great sufferer from Salt-Rheum on my limbs, for a dozen years previous to the summer of 1876, at which time I was cured by Shaker Blood Syrup. The skin would become dry, chap, crack open, bleed and itch intensely, so that I could not help scratching, which of course made them worse. At that time I commenced taking Shaker Blood Syrup (in the summer of 1876) they were so bad that they discharged, and I was obliged to keep them bandaged with linen cloths. The skin was drawn so tight by the heat of the disease that if I stooped over they would crack open and actually bring tears to my eyes. The first bottle benefitted me so much that I continued taking it till I was cured. Hoping many others may learn the value of Shaker Blood Syrup, and receive as much benefit as I have, I am,

Very truly yours,
C. A. HOWARD, West 11th St., New York.

Catarrh A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished, he claims the Catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favourable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.—Montreal Star, Nov. 17, 1882. 48-52t

"Hope."

Sturdy little farmer boy, tell me how you know
When 't is time to plow the fields, and to reap and mow.
Do the hens "with yellow legs"
Scold you when you hunt for eggs?
Do you drive the ducks to drink, waddling in a row?
Do the pigs in concert squeal
When you bring their evening meal?
Tell me, little farmer boy, for I'd like to know.

Nimble little sailor boy, tell me how you know
How to navigate your ship when the tempests blow.
Do you find it pretty hard
Clinging to the topsail-yard?
Don't you fear some stormy day overboard you'll go?
Do they let you take a light
When you go aloft at night?
Tell me, little sailor boy, for I'd like to know.

Little boys of every kind, tell me how you know
That 't is time ere school begins rather ill to grow.
Does the pain increase so fast
That 't is terrible at last?
Don't you quickly convalesce when too late to go?
Do you think I am a dunce?
Was n't I a school-boy once?
Tell me, all you little boys, for I'd like to know.
—John F. Adams, in St. Nicholas for September.

Good-Bye.

"Farewell, farewell, is a lonely word,
And often brings a sign,
But give to me that dearer word
That comes from the heart—good-bye."

IT IS A GOD SPEED.

There is a hearty shake of the hand, a tremor of feeling in the friendly tones, but no hint of parting. They two are friends standing together on the deck of a ship that is outward bound. Both are on a journey—a voyage on unknown seas — the one who goes and the one who stays. Full of life, of hope for the future, there is no hint of sadness in the ringing good-bye that seems the announcement of a bond of union rather than of separation, the assurance that come weal or come woe with them it will be well. It is the good-bye of victory rather than of defeat.

IT IS AN ADMONITION.

The words say plainly to these lovers: "Be true," "remember me," "until we meet again." They may not salute each other as even strangers may do at parting. They must be oblivious to the ceremonies of even ordinary friendship. Their love is too new and sacred a thing to be brought out to the public gaze. They can only clasp each other's hands, and look into each other's eyes and stammer one passionate, regretful, good-bye.

"But the heart feels most when the lips move not
And the eyes speak the gentle good-bye!"

IT IS A BENEDICTION.

An aged couple are parting now. "Oh when to meet again!" They do not know that other eyes are upon them. They are alone with each other and God. There is a solemn, tremulous good-bye. They have no word to say. Each knows what is in the heart of the other; distance cannot separate those two.

"Our hearts ever answered in tune and in time, love,
As octave to octave and rhyme unto rhyme, love."

IT IS A PRAYER.

God be with you! The words can have no other meaning for those whom death parts. They all have need of this prayer who are going out into that limitless future where farewells and good-byes are sounds unknown. Fold the pale hands, kiss the sealed lips and the marble brow. It is but one who cries out in passionate, pleading agony: "Good-bye." The voice of the other is mute. Dear traveler to the far-off country, God be with you!

Swallowed by a Big Pike.

"A peculiar thing happened to me about a year ago," remarked the president of our fishing club when the members had gathered yesterday at the foot of the old dock. "I was trolling for pike in a lake in Lycoming county, Pennsylvania, when I was so unfortunate as to drop my pocket-book overboard. Besides a little money, there was a certificate for 100 shares of Western Union stock."

"W. U. rather went down that day, didn't it," interposed the reel-maker.

"Quite a decline," answered the president, "but it was only temporary. Two days afterward I caught a beauty of a pike near the same spot, and when I split him imagine my surprise to discover my pocketbook and my amazement to find that it now contained a certificate for 300 shares of Western Union stock. I couldn't explain the seeming miracle for months until the thought happened to strike me that the stock had been watered."

"That was pretty good luck," observed the manufacturer of rods, who was balancing himself on the top of a spile, "but just the same you only caught one fish. Now, I once brought up twenty-four fish on a single hook."

"We don't permit lying in this club," said the president, sternly.

"It's true," returned the other, without even winking. "For lack of something to do I had thrown a line off a dock into Harlem river. I sat there for an hour and a half without feeling a bite, except mosquitoes, when on pulling up I felt that a heavy weight was on the line. On investigation I found that I had hooked twenty-four fish!"

"What kind of fish?" exclaimed every one.

"I'd hooked a box of sardines that had been dropped overboard by some excursion boat."

It cost him the price of a split bamboo rod to fix things so he would not be dropped overboard.—New York Journal.

The Reward of Politeness.

"Will you be kind enough, sir, to hold this ram for me while I open this gate? It is fastened on the inside and I must climb over."

This modest request was made yesterday by a man who was standing at a gate on a lonely road running out of New Dorp, Staten Island, and it was addressed to a stalwart sailor who had just come up. The only other living object visible on the long, straight road was the large black ram, whose massive crooked horns were being held by the man as two stood quite still in front of the gate.

"Why, sartinly, shipmate," said the obliging tar, as he seized the big horns and relieved the first holder.

The latter climbed quickly over the gate.

"I thank you very much," he said politely when he got to the other side. You will be surprised to hear that I never saw that before to-day. The brute attacked me about half an hour ago, and we have been tussling together ever since. As long as you stand before him holding his horns firmly he can't hurt you much. Goodbye. I hope you will be as lucky in getting away from him as I have been.

The New Dorp man when telling his story last night neglected to repeat the sailor's reply. He did not know what became of him.—New York Sun.

MIDLAND DISTRICT DOINGS.

The Cream of Occurrences Condensed from Contemporary Columns.

EMILY.

The annual municipal elections resulted in the return of Mr. Thos. H. McQuade, Reeve, with a majority of 42: Mr. J. J. Mitchell, Dep'ty Reeve, and Messrs. Cassidy, Switzer and Scully as Councillors.

OMEMEE.

The funeral sermon of the late John Mitchell, of Emily, was preached in the Methodist Church, on Sunday, by the Rev. J. C. Wilson.

At the late examinations six candidates were allowed admission to the High School.

LINDSAY.

The passenger station, baggage and express rooms of the Grand Trunk Railway were burned to the ground Thursday morning. The fire started in the ticket office about five o'clock, and was caused by the explosion of a coal oil lamp. The contents of the ticket and agent's office was burned, but nearly all the baggage was saved. The flames spread so rapidly that the night operator was powerless to stay their progress.

COBOURG.

We regret to learn, says the World, that on Monday morning the well-known woollen factory known as the Shelter Valley Mills was destroyed by fire. The proprietors, Messrs Calder & Graham, had taken over the premises so long occupied by Mr. H. Greenwood, and having made extensive alterations and improvements were succeeding very satisfactorily in business. Their loss is stated at ten or twelve thousand dollars, with an insurance of only half that amount. We hope they may feel themselves in a position to rebuild.

PORT HOPE.

A charge of assault—unduly severe punishment of a pupil named Stevenson—against Mr. Stott, headmaster of the Public School, was dismissed by the Police Magistrate.

At the annual meeting of Extinguisher Hose Company Mr. Gamble was elected captain and G. W. Hawkins, secretary.

The High School opened with an actual attendance of 115.

The Times says:—"A special order has been issued, forbidding conductors of mixed and freight trains on the Grand Trunk Railway allowing passengers to travel on their trains without having first procured tickets. The new orders compel the conductor to go through his train before it leaves the station and ascertain if each passenger has a ticket, and in case he has not, compel him either to procure one or get off the train."

THE AMERICAN GARDEN.

It will interest all fruit, flower and vegetable growers to learn that the American Garden of New York has been sold to E. H. Libby, the well known agricultural journalist. Established in 1872 as a quarterly, the American Garden has become a handsome, monthly magazine, and a leader among horticultural publications. Under its new management it is an independent, illustrated, beautifully printed magazine, still ably edited by Dr. F. M. Hexamer and numbering as contributors many of the most successful fruit growers and gardeners in this and other countries. The coming volume will be greatly improved in many ways, and worthy of the earnest and hearty support of all who love fruits flowers and nice gardens, and all who make a business of their culture. The price is only $1.00 a year, including some choice seed and plant premiums. Published in New York, and Greenfield, Mass.

PETERBOROUGH, JAN. 15, 1885.

Lennox.

Last Thursday the election for the Commons was held in Lennox, and resulted in the return of Mr. Pruyn, the Conservative candidate, who was unseated for bribery by agents. His majority was forty-one, and the chances may almost certainty is that he will be again unseated. The friends of Mr. Allison, the defeated candidate, are already in possession of facts sufficient to unseat Mr. Pruyn, with all the expedition an election court will admit of. There is no room for doubt that the peculiar tactics, for which the Conservative politicians have become famous, or, rather, infamous, were applied with the usual effect. Sir John, the father of political corruption in Canada in 1882, demoralized the riding by a wholesale bribery, whose lightest facts relieved the election court from any hesitation in unseating the "Chieftain." It is not probable that his protege, Mr. Pruyn, who squares his political faith by that of his leader, would be any more scrupulous in availing himself of the political expedients, to whose general application the Conservative party owes its being in power to-day.

Beaten Again.

A big, bitter drop in Sir John's cup, in the midst of the party banquets and junkettings, is the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, that the Dominion License Act "is not worth the paper it is written on." On Monday morning the Supreme Court gave judgment on the "Liquor License Act of 1883 and the Amended Act of 1884," and the whole five judges were unanimous in declaring that the McCarthy Liquor Act is ultra vires. The effect is to declare that the Crooks Act is perfectly constitutional, and entirely within the legislative competency of Ontario; that Mr. Mowat, in contending that he had a legal right to legislate on liquor licenses, was right, and that the great constitutional lawyer was wrong. In fact, in the last eight or ten references to the Privy Council, Mr. Mowat's contention has been upheld and Sir John's dishonored. On the license question Sir John was, however, particularly positive of being right. He told the Licensed Victuallers of Yorkville, in June, 1882, that the Crooks Act was "not worth the paper it was written on," and he assured them that if they tested its validity before the courts they were sure of victory, and that he would "tell Mowat, that little tyrant, that he (Sir John) would get a bill passed at Ottawa, etc." And he did "get a bill" passed, which the Supreme Court has decided he had no power to pass. Sir John, by his desire to centralize power at Ottawa, by his desire to insult Ontario and injure Mr. Mowat, has wrought great confusion and mischief. His evil advice led the liquor dealers to send the appeal case of Hodge vs. the Queen to the Privy Council, at a great cost, only to have Mr. Mowat's License Act sustained. A large amount has been paid in fees for bogus licenses, which the trade will probably lose, and the country will lose the amount of the vast expense connected with the organization of the license boards, and the salaries of inspectors; while the latter, and the commissioners, will have to lay aside the empty honors of their positions under a bogus and usurping license law. And all for the sake of grabbing patronage, and robbing this province of her rights. Sir John has made made many miserable muddles on constitutional questions, but the mess made with the Dominion License Act is the worst and most humiliating.

University Confederation.

Last July the Minister of Education in pursuance of his vigorous policy, for placing every department of the educational interests of this province upon a sound basis, invited representatives from the different colleges and universities of Ontario, to consult with him in reference to consideration of and agreement upon a basis of co-operation in higher education, involving the consolidation of the university system of the Province of Ontario. A second conference was held in November, and a third was held last week, at which a scheme of confederation was devised If this scheme is accepted by the universities interested, its effect will be, it is understood, to locate in Toronto every college in Ontario. The colleges to be embraced in the proposed federation are, of course, the University of Toronto, Queen's University, Kingston; Victoria University, Cobourg; Trinity University, Knox College, Wycliffe College: St. Michael's College and the Baptist College, Toronto. The advantages to be derived from a confederation such as is proposed, would, undoubtedly be very great, but the reconciliation of the necessarily conflicting interests of the different colleges, and the recognition of their several rights and privileges, add difficulty to the solution of the problem. Not the least will be sectional influences and considerations. It is understood that the Theological colleges of Toronto, and possibly Trinity and Victoria Universities will assent to this scheme. The representatives of Queen's College, Kingston, however, are not in thorough accord with the scheme proposed.

School Readers.

Hon. G. W. Ross, Minister of Education, with the vigour that characterizes the administration of his Department, set to work to settle the difficulties of the readers, and completed an arrangement by which a set of readers was compiled, adapting what was best of the three costly ventures of certain publishers, and in a way recouping them for the outlay by granting them the exclusive right of publication for ten years, stipulating mechanical execution and maximum price. The Provincial authorities hold the copyright of these works and the public are guaranteed a permanent set of readers, without a chance for extortion as to price and danger of parents being put to unnecessary expense for repeated and frequent changes. The price of the books is not only fixed, but the rate of discount to the trade is also defined, so that the public knows exactly how the matter of price of readers stands. Of course the Conservative press tries to paint the transaction in the darkest colors, and is endeavouring to incite the trade in opposition to Hon. Mr. Ross, on the ground that the latter has too small profits. If the Minister of Education has considered the cheapness of the books to the buyers more than the interests of dealers, he certainly earns the gratitude of the former. The interests of the public who have to buy the books are those which should be consulted, and which have been consulted, and the parents of Ontario are under a debt of gratitude to Hon. Mr. Ross for the stand he has taken in regard to the school-book question. Interested politicians may croak for the sake of political effect, but the public will rejoice that the vexatious changes of school readers is a thing of the past, and will sympathise with Hon. Mr. Ross in his efforts to reduce the burden of the purchase of school books to the lowest possible degree

The Advance of Democracy.

While Canadian Liberals are making a gallent fight for the advancement of the principles they honor, though the battle in face of organized corruption, allied to the most tenacious Toryism, is a desperate one, it is pleasing to note that democracy—the rule of the people—is gaining important advantages in England. The adoption of the Franchise Bill is an evidence that the right of the people to the fullest voice in the management of the public affairs, that so vitally concern themselves, is securing recognition from the hereditary foes of popular rights. The House of Lords, the embodiment of tyranny, —constitutionally restricted, however—was confronted with the alternative of destruction or yielding to the demand for popular privileges. They yielded, ungracefully and indirectly it is true, but they yielded. By the passage of the Franchise Bill, over two millions of British subjects were enfranchised. Now, any man who has a home has a right to the ballot. This victory for the people is simply the culmination of former agitations and victories. The Reform Bill of 1832, enfranchised 500,000 Britons, while the act of 1867 added 1,300,000 to the list of ballot holders.

Again while the people are loyal to the monarchical principle, a large number is in favor of modifications of past and existing conditions, which, while not curtailing the power of the Throne, will relieve the people from contributing to unnecessary expense in maintaining the members of royalty. The grants to members of the Royal family have been large, and they are becoming proportionately unpopular. The grants made to the present Royal family are merely the observance of an agreement made by Parliament to provide for the family of the Queen, the latter in consideration, resigning certain royal perquisites. This compact Parliament has kept, but there is a growing feeling against the immense payments involved. The Prince of Wales with a prevision that he has more than once given evidence of, abandons the idea of asking Parliament to make a grant to his eldest son, who is about coming of age. The Prince of Wales in thus recognizing the drift of public opinion, will add to his popularity, and pave the way to a hearty reception, as the sovereign of the British, when the time—which we hope is far distant —may come for him to succeed his Royal mother.

Another significant incident in connection with enlargement of popular rights is the circular, sent by Lord Roseberry to his brother peers of the House of Lords, inviting their attention to the matter of reforming that chamber

This is, indeed, significant, and points to the conclusion that ere long the House of Lords must be "mended or ended." If it continues to obstruct the expression of the popular will it should be radically "mended," and if that obstruction is pushed to extremes it will certainly be "ended." A liberal franchise wielded by an enlightened and free people, is a power against which a hereditary institution, which has outlived its usefulness, will contend in vain.

The embryo British protectionist if he had his way would be a more out and out lunatic than his Canadian prototype. The British "fair traders" propose to begin by putting a duty of a dollar and a quarter a bushel on Canadian wheat. Now, all the Tory papers rejoice at the "spread of protection principles" in Great Britain, and the more extreme the views the greater the rejoicing. How considerate are those papers of the interests of the farmer, who would by such a duty of $1.25 per bushel be shut out of a British market—and the only one—completely. According to Tory doctrine it is the producer, and not the consumer, that pays the duty.

Editorial Notes.

The nominations for the Provincial Legislature will take place in South Renfrew on the 20th, and polling on the 27th inst.

The Detroit Free Press says: "Sir John Macdonald is the J. G. B. (James G. Blaine) of Canada." It was the G. C. B. he prided himself about at the great convivium in Toronto the other day.

At the general election the Tories carried Lennox for the Dominion by over two hundred majority; but to-day they are fairly bowling with delight because they retain it by the skin of their teeth. There is nothing like being thankful for small mercies!

Messrs. James Bethune and William Johnston, both prominent Reformers, and both engaged in the argument on different sides of the validity of the Dominion License Act before the Supreme Court, both died before judgment was given.

Hon. A. S. Hardy, Provincial Secretary, has been confined to his bed at his home in Brantford for the last two weeks with bilious fever. We are glad to say that he is now convalescing, and expects to be at work again in the course of a week or ten days.

The Legislative Chamber in Toronto is being put in order for the coming session of the Legislature. The Chamber presents a neat appearance. The Government clerks are very busy preparing the reports of the different departments to be presented this session.

The Mail assures us that Sir John was received at Montreal, on his arrival to the banquet, amidst the "wild enthusiasm of the citizens." Wonder if the ghost of the defunct Dominion License Act was on hand, like Banquo's ghost, to disturb the digestion of the "Chieftain."

A banquet in honor of Hon. G. W. Ross, Minister of Education, and to celebrate the conversion of Strathroy High School to a Collegiate Institute, was held in the Queen's Hotel, Strathroy, on Monday evening last, under the auspices of the teachers and students of the institution.

Here is a sample of what protection has done for New Brunswick:—In 1873, when the Government of Sir John Macdonald was defeated, the tonnage of the city of St. John was 247,227. When Mr. Mackenzie retired the tonnage of the city of St. John was 281,178. At the end of the last fiscal year it was 249,263, a decrease of 32,000 tons under the policy which the present Ministry inaugurated.

Our Conservative friends are great sticklers for "Canada for the Canadians"—on paper. In practice, however, there is utter disregard of the principle. Mr. John Henry Pope, Minister of Agriculture, has been following the example of Sir John and Hon. David Macpherson, by importing young British swells to fill positions in his department. A young Englishman who has just arrived on an assisted passage ticket, boasts that he was cabled for by the Government, and thinks he was sent for because there were none competent in Canada to fill the position Thus the native Canadian finds himself not only supplanted by an outsider, but he is also taxed to pay the passage to Canada of pauper penmen, to take the bread and—cigarettes—out of his mouth. "Canada for the Canadians."

The Montreal Star has ascertained that the members of the Syndicate formed for the purpose of buying up wheat in Manitoba and the North-West are Messrs. George Stephen, Van Horne, R. B. Angus and Hon. D. A. Smith, all of whom are members of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The first effect of the formation of this new Syndicate has been to give farmers a better price. The danger is that its ultimate effect will be to create a grain monopoly. Other buyers will not be in a position to compete, because the C.P.R. wheat Syndicate can get exceptional freight rates from the C.P.R., and therefore other buyers will be driven out of the market. Buying grain is one of those side businesses that the Railway Company might better keep out of. The Company's relations with the farmers are too close to be comfortable already.

A PRIEST ON TRANSUBSTANTIATION.

We have been requested to republish the following from The Rock, a Church of England perodical;—In an interesting and now somewhat rare work, Recit naif et fidele de l'Abjuration des Erreurs de l'Eglise Romaine, faite a Basle, en Suisse, le 19 Fevrier, 1773, by the Rev. Dr. Emeric de St. Dalmas, Canon of Nice, there is a passage upon transubstantiation which is worthy of translation and reproduction. The author appears to have received a letter from M. De La Lande to the following effect: "You will take nothing for a guide but Holy Scirpture, and every interpretation which is contrary to exhort me strongly to read it, discarding common sense and reason; yet this is what I read in St. John, chap. vi. ver. 51: 'I am the living bread which came down from heaven, if any man eat of this bread he shall live for ever; and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world;' verse 52: 'The Jews therefore strove among themselves, saying, 'How can this man give us his flesh to eat?'—the Jews then talked like the Calvinists—this mystery appeared to them incomprehensible But Jesus answered them in verse 53, 'Verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink His blood, ye have no life in you.' He goes on to say in the following verse; 'For My flesh is meat indeed, and My blood is drink indeed. He that eateth My flesh, and drinketh My blood, dwelleth in Me, and I in him.' It is Jesus Christ Himself who says it." This the writer considered necessitated transubstantiation, or transmutation from one form to another. The reply of Dr. St. Dalmas to this argument is very clear and to the purpose. He points out to M. De La Lande, "that if he had examined carefully the words which follow in the sixty-third verse of the same chapter of St. John, which he quoted to me to prove transubstantiation, he would have found that Jesus Christ gave us there the key to the enigma, and Himself showed us the true meaning of all that He had just said before. In fact, seeing that many were offended, and that His disciples even when they heard it said, "This is an hard saying; who can hear it?" He said to them, "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you they are Spirit, and they are life." And thereby He taught them that they must not take literally what He had just said to them; that they must not eat His flesh and drink His blood with a material eating and drinking like as with other food, but with the spiritual eating and drinking, that is to say by faith in the body which He was about to offer for us, and in His blood which He was about to shed for us. And so the bread and the wine of the Lord's Supper, which he instituted on the eve of His death, represent to us the body and the blood of Jesus Christ, and this representation does away with the dogma of transubstantiation; for, 'It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing'; the words that I speak unto you they are spirit and they are life.'"

Turnbull is ahead of the times, he is showing New Spring Cretonnes in lovely patterns, cheaper than ever.

"Fair Play" Criticised.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

MY DEAR SIR,—The letter of "Fair Play" in your last issue is not "fair." It appears to have been written by a papist in disguise.

If Mr. Chiniquy was expelled from the Church of Rome, it was because in his formula of submission to papal authority, he would not omit the words, "as far as is in accordance with the laws of Christ." This your correspondent has kept back.

If Mr. Chiniquy was suspended by the Presbytery of Chicago the act was reversed by the Synod. This, also, your correspondent withholds.

"Fair Play" and Mr. Dixon are kindred spirits, in the matter, at least, of misrepresentation.

It is a fact that by his own methods, bullying or not bullying, Mr. Chiniquy has been the means of bringing thousands and tens of thousands out of the Church of Rome. Has Mr. Dixon never heard of any French Canadian Protestants in Illinois? Has he never heard of any Presbyterian congregations in the Province of Quebec, composed entirely of those who were formerly adherents of the Church of Rome? If he has not, he is very ignorant of Mr. Chiniquy and his work, and should not have written upon the subject. If he has heard of these congregations,, and yet has written as he has done, he is wittingly guilty of a sad perversion of fact.

A man whose mother has been a "harlot," and whose eyes have been opened to the sadness of the relationship, can hardly help referring to "her who had given him birth" when he is trying to do what he can to open the eyes of others in similar circumstances to a sense of their duty and danger.

It is certainly "a dirty bird that touls its own nest," but it must be a clean bird that leaves its dirty nest, and tells about the dirtiness of it in order to obtain help to have it cleansed.

Yours truly,
TRUE BLUE.

ON TIME.

How Time Is Transmitted.

The determination and transmission of exact time forms, in a utilitarian sense, is an important part of the National observatory. It is interesting to observe the routine followed every day by the time officer. At 11 o'clock he enters the chronometer room, and spends half an hour or more in comparing and winding the chronometers. Some of these are ready to go on sea voyages, while others must undergo a long period of corrections. In the room are also two clocks, a mean time and a transmitting clock. The former is never corrected, and when the Post reporter visited the observatory it was nine and some hundredths seconds fast. It is never over thirty seconds out of the way. Once a year it is taken down and cleaned, but it is never tinkered with or "regulated." Every day its error is closely calculated by the Lieutenant in charge.

At 11:40 the error of the transmitting clock is obtained. This is done by recording on a chronograph both its beats and the beats of the mean time clock. If they do not register simultaneously the difference can be determined to the hundredth part of a second. The point of a lead pencil held just near enough to the pendulum of the transmitting clock to retard it if it is fast, or accelerate it if it is slow, enables the officer to make the difference between the clocks just equal to the error of the mean time clock, which will be shown on the tell-tale chronograph.

At 11:50 the officer signals to the watchman on the roof, and he hoists the time-ball.

At 11:56 the chronograph is connected with the mean time clock, and the clicking—each click represents a second—begins.

Half a minute later the officer turns a switch, and the transmitting clock is ready to be connected with the outgoing wires.

At 11:56:44 the repeater switch, connecting these wires, is closed, and the beat of the next second, the forty-fifth, goes out, the first signal that the hour of noon is approaching.

At 11:58:55 an automatic break arrangement causes the clock to cease transmitting the electric current, and for five seconds there are no beats. The next click begins the last minute before noon. This click is the signal for the watchman on the roof to slip a bolt through a ring, thus fastening the ball.

Ten seconds before 12 a final adjustment is made. Then there is a moment's silence—then a click as the second hand reaches 60, and the ball on the dome has dropped and the hour of noon has been flashed across the land in every direction.

It used to be the custom for the time officer to listen for the click and then press a key. This has been abandoned, and now the signal flashes direct from the clock itself. There are several telegraph instruments connected with the clock, communicating with the several telegraph companies, the fire alarm bells, and by a private line with clocks in the War, State, and Navy Departments, White House, National Museum, clerk's office United States Senate, Government printing office, Interior and Post Office Departments, city post office, Treasury Department, and the headquarters of the Surgeon General. The Signal Office also gets the correct time.—Washington Post.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY

The annual meeting of the Smith, Lakefield, &c. Agricultural Society took place in the council chamber on Thursday the 8th inst., Mr. John Garbutt, president, in the chair.

The financial report was read by the Sec'y-Treas. which showed a balance of $6.23 on hand.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:- President Geo. W. Fitzgerald, Vice-president Mr. John C. Sherin, Directors:- Messrs Alex. Fitzgerald, John Garbutt, Dr. Caldwell, Thos. Young, Wm. Abbott, J. H. McWilliams, C. Quinn, Ed. Fitzgerald, and John Fairbairn. Auditors:- Mr. Wm. Graham and Mr. Asa. Fairbairn. The desirability of securing grounds for the society was discussed, and a committee consisting of Messrs. J. C. Sherin, Geo. W. Fitzgerald, Dr. Caldwell, and W. R. Graham were appointed to report to the directors if any place could be obtained. The new directors met after general meeting.

Mr. M. S. Dean was appointed Sec-Treasurer for the ensuing year.

A. B. Des Rochers, Arthabaskaville, P.Q., writes: "Thirteen years ago I was seized with a severe attack of rheumatism in the head, from which I nearly constantly suffered, until after having used Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil for nine days bathing the head, &c, when I was completely cured, and have only used half a bottle."

KEENE.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

"Hope deferred maketh the heart sick." There is yet no white-winged messenger to give us hope and joy. Hope of bounteous harvest in the coming autumn, and joy in the exhilarating motion of the merry sleigh with its musical bells, and general accompaniment of happy hearts. We want a sleigh ride, no uncommon want but the thing is, When are we to get it?

The Methodist Sunday School with teachers and parents, were given a most delightful treat at Dr. Harrison's, last Thursday evening. The night was very dark, but a goodly number of little ones and older ones, met in the Dr's. spacious residence, and, aided by his amiable and accomplished lady, and his own pleasant hospitality, spent a few happy hours, that all there will long remember, with genuine pleasure.

There were dainties enough for a tea-meeting, all sorts of goodies for the little folks, and old folks too. There was music, vocal and instrumental, the performers using piano or organ, as their taste directed. There were visits to the conservatory, and peeps into the deep dark mysteries of the surgery, and at a late hour, all went their ways happy and contented. The entertainment was given to the children in place of their usual Xmas tree, and the Doctor who is the S. S. Superintendent, and his popular and talented wife, deserve hearty thanks for their generous exertions in behalf of this good work.

The Scarlet Fever is not spreading as yet.

WESTWOOD.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

The returns show a very satisfactory exhibit for 1884 of Westwood cheese factory, of which Mr. T. Blezard, M.P.P. is president, and Mr. John Powell, secretary. The total amount of gross sales was $13,770.35. The amount paid patrons as per statement, $10,893.56; quantity of milk received at factory, 1,423,857 lbs.; number of pounds of cheese made, 137,251. A trifle over 10¼ lbs of milk was required for one pound of cheese. The average per st ndard was about $23.00, and the amount of standards of milk was 475 3/5. While the business of the factory has been conducted to the general satisfaction of the patrons, some patrons have reason to be particularly well pleased with the season's operations. Mr. Job Humphries' profits, after deducting expenses, netted $366.04 for 12 cows, an average of $33 per cow for the season. Mr. John Wood sent the milk of four cows to the factory for five and a half months and realized $163.91, the handsome profit of $40.90 per cow being returned to him for that time. The patrons generally are pleased with the management of the business of the factory. Mr. John Powell deserves great credit for the way in which he managed the factory and conducted the sales.

The election for councillors this year resulted in the return of Messrs. Byers, Baxter, Dawson, and Nurse. The vote stood thus:

	No. 1.	No. 2.	Total.
D. Baxter	21	84	105
J. Buchan	8	68	76
L. Byers	90	32	122

A GOOD LOAD.

Mr. John Kerr, on Friday last, drew to the Peterborough market a pretty big load, consisting of 116 bushels and 13 lbs of oats—nearly two tons. The team was a small one, too. It would have been almost impossible for him to draw such a load over the Port Hope and Rice Lake gravel road to Port Hope. It would have nearly killed his ponies, and cost him fifty cents in toll besides. It is plain that Peterborough is the best market for the people of this township.

AN UNGRATEFUL RASCAL.

A short time since, Mr. Wm. Rutherford gave employment to a man named Wm. Rochart, more out of kindness than a need for his services, as he had a good man hired by the year. On Monday morning Mr. Rutherford had occasion to leave home, and he left orders to his men what to do in his absence. In the morning the regular hired man rose early, and went to thresh for a neighbor. Rochart rose shortly afterwards and went, it was supposed, to work in the woods. Not returning at dinner time search was made for him, but without result. When the hired man returned home from the threshing he discovered that Rochart had stolen from him $12 in cash, 2 pairs of socks, 2 pairs of mitts, and had broken open a trunk and taken a coat and vest. The rascal has not been heard of since, and is in all probability looking out for fresh victims. Farmers beware of the beat.

DECEMBER WEATHER NOTES.

Following November with a few fine days, the thermometer on the morning of the 1st being only 14° below the freezing point, which gradually kept rising until on the evening of the 5th, at sunset it stood at 50° above zero, and, at 6 p. m., commenced one of the severest rain storms experienced for a long time, rain falling from 6 p. m. on the 5th, to 6 p. m. on the 7th, to the depth of 2 and 5-100 inches, finishing with wet snow. From that throughout the month, snow fell on 11 days, to the depth of 14 inches and 3-10 of an inch, the heaviest fall being on the 24th, which measured 5 inches and 3-10 on the level. On the 18th a cold wave set in, the theremometer at sun-rise being 1° below zero, and at sun-set, 3°. At sun-rise on the 19th it stood 26° below; at sun set, 17°. On the 20th at sunrise, 23° below, at sun-set 1°, and for 4 days, with only one exception, the thermometer at or above zero. But on the morning of the 25th it fell to 8 degrees below, and at sun-set, 10°, and on the morning of the 26th it dropped to 27°, being the coldest of the season. The average temperature of the month was 25°. Rain fell on eight days to the depth of 2 inches and 33-100 of an inch. Fog on the 27th and 30th. From the 27th to the end, it was fine, warm, genial weather, with snow all gone and frost out of the ground, with occasionaly a slight rain, the month of December with the year rolling into oblivion, with the old man's tear on its cheek.

A RACY RACCOON RECITAL.

This township has furnished one of the most thrillling raccoon romances of the age, and the beauty of it is, the astonishing facts hereafter related are literally true. One day last week Washburne, the "hired man" of Mr. John Hanbidge, lot 8, in the 7th concession, went to the woods to work, accompanied by a dog named "Jeff Storey." On the way to the scene of work, the dog rushed at a log, which was hollow at one end. Washburne naturally proceeded to investigate, and cut a hole in the hollow log. As soon as he had made the opening large enough, out rushed five raccoons—the dam and four fine cubs. Washburne and the dog went at the new work thus literally "cut out" for them, and, by vigorous exertions succeeded in killing the whole five. Returning to the log where they had started this raccoon bonanza, both were astonished and delighted to see five more 'coons—again a dam and four cubs—break cover. Then the slaughter began again, and the second five 'coons were soon placed hors de combat, and ten animals were thus the spoil of the 'coon-killing tournament. Mr. Hanbidge and a neighbor, hearing the noise of the conflict, arrived in time to witness the lively skirmish done by Washburne and his ally, "Jeff Storey," who, without assistance, slaughtered the innocents in fine style, first stunning them and then returning to complete the massacre. The animals were skinned, and Mr. Washburne has ten as fine raccoon pelts as ever were stretched. He wants to know if any one can beat his record, every word of which as related above is vouched for as being literally true.

CAVAN.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

On Wednesday, January 7th, Mr. J. C. Smythe, late of "Fairmount," was united in marriage to Miss Webster, at the residence of the bride's father, Millbrook. The ceremony was followed by the wedding breakfast, and the happy pair received the congratulations of a large number of friends. The bridal presents were numerous and costly. The newly-wed went east on a wedding tour, and after visiting Montreal and Quebec they will return to Lindsay, where they will make their future home. We wish them, one and both, all the happiness domestic life can yield the happily-mated.

There are two young men in the vicinity of Springville, one keeping a bachelor's hall on the 11th concession, and the other on the 12th. They would be wise to follow the example of neighbor Smythe. Both are certainly old enough. Come boys, there are hosts of maidens who would enjoy the pleasure of brightening even a bachelor's hall. Brace up, boys, and buckle on the harness of Hymen.

Mr. Robert Howden, who is retiring from the toils of farm life, had a very extensive sale on the 30th ult., when some choice bargains were offered to purchasers. The day being all that could be wished for, added much to the appearance of his stock. Cattle sold well and were readily picked up by Peterborough men and others. We are pleased to learn that the "fowl breeder" of Springville is turning his attention to Clydesdale horses also, he having purchased a two year old of great size, beauty and action. Horses varied in price from $46 to $156. Mr. C. Stapleton being auctioneer, as usual, spared no efforts to do his employer justice.

The old Cavan Council was re-elected by acclamation—the right men in the right place. But we think if they would insert each meeting's business in some of the local papers it would please the ratepayers much better. We are sure it they would send a copy of the business to any of the editors they would willingly insert it for them.

[Certainly; we shall be pleased to receive and insert proceedings of township councils, if sent us. We should prefer, to give all a chance, to have the proceedings condensed as much as possible, consistently with accuracy. ED. EXAMINER.

Immense cases of new Spring Prints, have landed at Turnbull's. Don't be persuaded to buy old goods.

WARSAW.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

A Saved Army Jubilee was held in this village on Thursday, Jan. 18th, and was in every way a grand success. Stirring addresses were delivered by General Lindsay, Capts. Piper and Munt, and Mr. Campbell. The singing by the choir, and the recitations and readings by F. Anderson, F. Calder, L. Cooper, Bella Hamblin, E. McIlvena, and Miss Belts, were all well received, and added much to the evening's entertainment. A Bible reading by W. Mitchell, Ashburnham, a blind lad, from a Bible with raised letters, was very interesting. Mr. Watts filled the chair in a very acceptable manner. Proceeds, net, a very handsome sum. The Peterborough visitors were handsomely entertained. The chairman's devotion to the "barrel" was so evident that it was hard to keep him and the audience "sober." Those present will understand the allusion Some evil parties removed the nuts off the wheels of the Peterborough 'bus, add it is a mercy that some were not killed or injured, as it was not discovered till on the road.

BRIDGENORTH.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

There is splendid skating on the lake here. Every evening there are from one to two hundred young people on the ice. With a huge bonfire casting its bright gleams over the glairy surface of the lake, and the gay throngs skimming over the unlimited expanse of ice, the bracing breeze kindling roses in every cheek, there is such a picture of fun and enjoyment as the patrons of your little, narrow, contracted, walled-in, seven-by-nine skating rinks in town, can have no idea of.

The schools re-opened for the new year with a full attendance. Mr. Wright, the teacher, is the right man in the right place, and deservedly enjoys the confidence of both parents and pupils.

Mr. M. S. Dean has been re-appointed secretary-treasurer of the Smith, Eastmore and Lakefield agricultural society. Mr. Dean's genial presence will be welcome at the fairs.

Wood and grain has been passing through here pretty briskly to Peterborough from Eastmore and the north of Smith.

On Saturday morning as the Bobcaygeon stage, was driving across the ice of Pigeon lake, both horses broke through the ice and one was drowned. The proprietors of the line, Messrs. Conners & Kearns, lose $150.

The Ruddy River

of life is the blood. From it the system receives all its material of growth and repair. It bathes every tissue of the body. How necessary, then, that the blood should be kept pure and rich. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is this great blood food and blood purifier. It is a sovereign remedy for all diseases due to impoverished blood, consumption, bronchitis, weak lungs, scrofula, influenza, and kindred diseases.

The distress in Paris is terrible. A special says there was a meeting of the editors of the principal papers on Sunday to devise means of relief. It is proposed to raise a fund by a grand dramatic performance, to be followed by a fancy-dress ball, by a lottery on the Bourse, and by the production of a volume of the unpublished works of the greatest French authors.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all throat and Lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this receipt, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 149 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

KING'S EVIL

Was the name formerly given to Scrofula because of a superstition that it could be cured by a king's touch. The world is wiser now, and knows that can only be cured by a thorough purification of the blood. If this is neglected, the disease perpetuates its taint through generation after generation. Among its earlier symptomatic developments are Eczema, Cutaneous Eruptions, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Purulent Ulcers, Nervous and Physical Collapse, etc. If allowed to continue, Rheumatism, Scrofulous Catarrh, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Tubercular Consumption, and various other dangerous or fatal maladies, are produced by it.

M. E. BRADDON.

Author of "Lady Audley's Secret," etc. etc. etc.

It was an hour after bed-time; the other children were all snoring on their hard little bolsters. There was no one to overhear the sisters as they whispered and plotted. It was no new thought with Rose O'Hara. She had been meditating upon it for a long time, ever since the new rule had begun and had made Kathleen unhappy. She had never forgotten those words of Miss Fitzpatrick's: "When you are grown up you will have to get your own living, and then you may have to be parted." The very thought of severance from Kathleen, this only beloved of her heart, was despair. Rose made up her mind that there should be no such parting. Why should they not work and live together? Rose felt herself strong and brave, and able to work for both. She had wasted no opportunity that the convent afforded her. She had learnt all that her teachers had given her to learn, and now felt herself able to teach as she had been taught. If Miss Fitzpatrick were left free to plan their lives, she and her sister would be parted; but if she took their fate into her own hands, they could spend their lives together—prosper or fail together; and, in her young hopefulness, it seemed to her that failure was hardly possible.

She whispered the plan to Kathleen. They were to get up at daybreak—at the first glimmer of light—dress themselves, and creep out of the dormitory and down the stairs, with their shoes in their hands. The door opening into the garden was bolted only. They had nothing to do but draw back the heavy bolts noiselessly. The garden was guarded by high walls, except in one weak point which the girls knew well. An older wall, only eight feet high—a ponderous old wall, with heavy buttresses of crumbling brick—divided the western side of the garden from an extensive orchard sloping down to the river.

This wall had been scaled by many a young rebel, in quest of plums and pears, and it would be no obstacle to the sisters' escape. Rose would take a change of linen in a little bundle, and her fortune of fifteen gold pieces, Biddy's legacy, in her pocket; and with this stock of worldly wealth they would make their way to Paris, that wonderful, beautiful city, of which they had heard so much from some of their schoolfellows, the daughters of Parisian tradesmen, who had been sent to the Belgian convent for cheapness.

"Are we going to walk all the way?" asked Kathleen.

"Not all the way, darling. We can go by rail. But if we find the journey would cost us too much we might walk part of the way."

"I will walk as far as you like; I am not afraid," said Kathleen.

Their scheme prospered. In the dewy morning they climbed the crumbling orchard-wall, where there was plenty of foothold on the broken bricks, and ran across the wet grass to the edge of the river, following which they came to the high-road. They avoided Bruges, the city of church towers, and steep roofs, and many bridges, and made for the road to Courtrai. Their first day's journey of fifteen miles was over a dusty road—long, dreary, monotonous—a long and weary walk; but they rested on the way at a cottage, where they enjoyed a meal of bread and fruit which cost them only a few pence. Not for years had they so relished any feast as they enjoyed this dinner of black bread and black cherries, which they ate in a little arbor covered with a hop-vine, in a corner of the cottage garden. They were three days on the road to Courtrai, sleeping in humble cottages, and living on the humblest fare. At the railway-station at Courtrai Rose found that the price of railway tickets to Paris, even the cheapest they could buy, would make a great hole in their little fortune; so she and Kathleen decided that they would walk all the way. It was a long journey, but not so long as that of the Scotch girl whom Rose had read about in Sir Walter Scott's story.

"I should like to walk," said Kathleen. "I have been so happy to-day—no lessons, no one to scold us. The sky, and the flowers, and the fields all to ourselves."

Rose found a decent lodging for the night in a weaver's cottage, and they started next morning on the road to Paris, Kathleen as merry as a lark, Rose happy, but with a grave sense of responsibility.

They were weeks upon the road, in the balmy summer weather, walking and walking, on and on, under a cloudless blue sky; for the heavens favored them, and the peerless July weather lasted all through their journey, save on one day when they were caught in a thunderstorm, and had to take refuge in a deserted stable, were they sat crouched together in a dark corner, while the thunder rolled over the broken thatch, and the lightning sent lances of fire zigzagging across the dusky gloom.

They were often very tired; they were often half choked and half blinded by the chalky dust of the long level roads; but they were happy; for they were together, and they were free. It was the first real holiday they had known since they had entered at the convent gate. No lessons, no burdens of any kind. Every day they knelt in the cool shade of some strange church to pray. They heard the mass sung by strange priests before village altars. They found friends at the cottages where they lodged. The women all admired Kathleen's golden hair and blue eyes, and sympathised with the sisters when told that they were orphans beginning the world together. No one overcharged or robbed them. They were treated generously everywhere. Their very defencelessness was their shield and breastplate.

And thus through toil, that had none of the bitterness of toil, they slowly approached the great city, which to their young imaginations was like a fairy city. They did not quite believe that the streets were paved with gold, but they fancied life would be very easy there, and that their hearts would be always light enough to enjoy the sparkle of the fountains, the glory of the broad strong river, the perfume of flowers, the beautiful churches and beautiful theatres, and shining lamp-lit boulevards, about which their schoolfellows had told them so much.

CHAPTER III.

KATHLEEN'S LOVER.

The first sensation with both sisters, when they came within view of the mighty city, was disappointment. Rose felt her heart sink within her. The houses were so high, the streets so long and dreary; the city seemed a wilderness of stone and plaster. All the trees on the boulevards—those long new boulevards by which they entered Paris—were white with dust, and had a withered look. The houses had a poverty-stricken air, despite their size and newness. They looked like big white gaols. As for flowers or fountains, parks or gardens, there was no sign of any such thing.

"What an ugly place!" cried Kathleen piteously. "Those girls at the convent must have been horrid storytellers."

They tramped on and on, till at last they came to the heart of the town, to the place of fountains and palaces and gardens and flowers. It was in the summer sunset. All things were gilded by that western radiance. Soldiers were marching along the Rue de Rivoli, drums beating, trumpets blaring. Lamps were lit in all the cafes, crowds of people were sitting about in the open streets, the concerts in the Champs Elysees were beginning their music and song, myriad little lamplons shining and twinkling in the last rays of the sun. Cleopatra's Needle, fountains, palace, soldiers, statues, trees, flowers, all fused themselves into one dazzling picture before the eyes of the two bewildered, wearied young travellers.

"O Rose, how beautiful! how beautiful!" gasped Kathleen, breathless with rapture. "How happy we shall be here!"

But while they stood admiring the fountains, listening to the martial music, the shades of evening were descending, and they had still to find a shelter for the night. Useless to look for such a shelter in this region of palaces. Rose took her sister by the hand and walked on, trusting to Fate to carry them to some humbler district, where they might find friendly and economical fare, as they had done everywhere on the way, thanks to Rose's instinct for discovering the fittest places, the right people.

Stars were beginning to flash and tremble upon the blue river as the orphans went over the bridge beyond the Louvre into that poorer Paris on the left bank of the Seine. Here they loitered about in the twilight till they drifted somehow into the Rue Git le Cœur; and at the door of one of the shabby old houses Rose saw a fat middle-aged matron, with a good-natured face, of whom she asked for advice as to a lodging.

The matron heard her story, and at once spread her motherly wing over both girls. There was a garni, a furnished third floor in the middle house in the yard. The rooms were small; just two little rooms and a tiny closet for kitchen; quite big enough for two girls. She led the way, introduced Rose to the concierge—whose husband was a shoemaker, occupying the basement of the house—and who went panting up the narrow stairs, key in hand, to show the lodging.

It was very small, very shabby; and cheap although it was, the rent seemed a great deal to Rose, after her experience of village lodgings on the way; but her new friend told her she might walk miles and get nothing so cheap in all Paris; so she took heart, and hired the apartment for a month certain, paying the fifth of her golden pieces, of which she had spent just four upon the road, as an instalment of the rent. And then, still directed by her stout friend, she went to a cremerie round the corner, and bought some milk and rolls and a little cheese for supper; and the sister sat down in their new home, so bare of many things essential for comfort, and laughed and cried over their first meal in Paris. Kathleen was almost hysterical with fatigue and excitement. All the way they had come, even in the midst of her girlish gladness, she had been haunted by fears of pursuit. The Reverend Mother would send the gardener after her, and have her taken back and shut up in the sun-baked room where the rats lived.

"But now we are safe," she said, with her head on her sister's shoulder, and Rose's arm round her, "we are safe in Paris; and if Reverend Mother sends after us, we'll go to the Emperor and ask him to take care of us. We are his subjects now." This was in '62, when the Empire was in its glory, and there was a sense of power and splendor in the third Napoleon's dominion over this beautiful modern Babylon, such as must have been felt in Rome under the politic sway of Augustus. These girls felt as if they were in a fortress, now they were within the charmed circle of imperial magnificence.

Years of struggle and poverty and industry and self-denial came after that happy evening when the girls sat in the twilight, dreaming of a bright future; but though the training was severe, it was perhaps, the best and noblest school in which humanity can be educated. The sisters were never unhappy, for they were together, and they were free. Rose was sister, mother, guardian, all the world of love and shelter for Kathleen, who bloomed into exquisite loveliness in that humble Parisian lodging, a fair flower blossoming unseen, with, happily, few to note her beauty.

Rose found only too soon that education was a drug in the Parisian markets. After heroic efforts to get employment as a morning governess in a tradesman's family, she fell back upon the only industry which offered itself, and, by the help of her first Parisian friend, Madame Schubert, the stout matron who had found her a lodging, she got employment as an artificial flower-maker, in which art she progressed rapidly, and, in a couple of years, attained a perfection which insured her liberal wages—wages which enabled her to maintain the little lodging, and feed and clothe herself and her sister. The fare was of the simplest, and there was a good deal of pinching needed to make both ends meet in that luxurious expensive city of Paris; especially in winter, when fuel made such an inroad upon the slender purse; but somehow the girls never knew actual privation, never went to bed hungry, or were haunted in their slumber by the nightmare of debt. The little rooms on the third story were the pink of neatness. Kathleen was housekeeper, and her busy hands swept and dusted and polished, and kept all things bright. The modest gray or brown merino gowns were never shabby or dilapidated. Collars and cuffs were always spotless, and the little feet neatly shod. There were always a few halfpence for the bag at Notre Dame, and there was always a loaf to divide with a poor neighbor, or a cup of soup for a sick child.

On the other hand, the pleasures of the sisters were of the rarest, and, perhaps, that is why they were so sweet. A steamboat excursion once or twice in a long summer to some suburban village that was almost the country; a visit to a cheap boulevard theatre once or twice in the long winter. But O, how heavenly was the scent of lime blossoms, how exquisite the verdure of summer meadows, to those who tasted the luxury so seldom! And how vivid and real was that sham world of the stage to those who so seldom saw the curtain rise upon that paint and tinsel paradise!

Rose and Kathleen lived as humbly as grisettes live, and dressed as grisettes dress; but they preserved the secluded habits of English ladies—knew no one, and spoke to no one, outside the narrow enclosure of that little stone-paved yard in the Rue Git le Cœur, with its three houses divided into twenty domiciles. Among these dwellings the sisters had made a few respectable acquaintances, including Madame Schubert, the stout matron who grew more and more obese as the years went by, who was described somewhat vaguely as a petit rentier, and whose only business in life was to know the business of her neighbors, and to attend upon an ancient coffee-colored pug almost as obese as herself.

As she was their first, so was Madame Schubert their best and most intimate friend, and, indeed, the one only person whom the Demoiselles O'Hara visited and received in this vast city of Paris. She was always their companion and protectress in those happy excursions to the country, those fairy-like nights at the theatre. It was she who supplied the secluded damsels with news of the outside world. She knew, or pretended to know, everything that was going on in Paris; and she certainly did know everything that went on in the Rue Git le Cœur.

It was Madame, or in familiar parlance Maman, Schubert who gave Rose and Kathleen the first information about a new lodger who had taken up his abode in the two little garrets over their own apartment—a young man with a handsome face, and gentil—ah, but how gentil! tout-a-fait talon rouge. He would bear comparison with any gandin on the boulevard, although his coat looked as if it had been well worn, and all his worldly goods consisted of one battered portmanteau and an old cigar-box full of books.

"He writes for the papers—for the Drapeau Rouge," said Maman Schubert. "I have seen the printer's devil going up stairs with proofs. But he is not rich, this youth, for he breakfasts at Suzon Michel's cremerie, and he often buys a slice of Lyons sausage and a loaf as he goes home in the afternoon, when other young men are going to their favorite restaurant."

"Dear maman, how is it that you know everything about everybody?" exclaimed Rose.

She had met the new lodger on the stairs that morning, and could not deny his good looks—his dark hair and eyes. He had dark eyes—eagle eyes—and a black moustache, and features as clearly cut as a profile on a Roman cameo.

"I have eyes and ears, and a head to sympathise with my neighbors in their joys and sorrows," said Madame Schubert. "One might as well be the statue of King Henry on the Pont Neuf as go through this world caring for nobody but oneself."

This was a clever way of making a feminine virtue from a virtue; but Maman Schubert was really a good soul, and always ready to help a poor neighbor. She was very fond of the O'Hara girls, and already she had begun to build her little castles in the air for their benefit. Rose was to marry Paddy, that honest young mechanic from the far south, beyond Carcassonne, who was doing so well as a journeyman cabinet-maker, and who was something of an artist in his way, and thus a little above the average mechanic. And now here there had dropped from the sky, as it were, the very lover of lovers for Kathleen—young, handsome, refined, as charming as a lover in a play.

Maman Schubert told herself it was high time Kathleen should have a lover, whose duty it would be to protect and cherish her, and to marry her so soon as ever they were rich enough to marry. She was much too pretty to remain unguarded by a strong man's love. For such fresh and innocent loveliness Paris was full of snares; she could not go the length of a street alone without encountering perils. The wolf was always on the watch for this lamb. Rose O'Hara's avocations compelled her to be absent all day long, and she was obliged to mew her young sister in the little sitting-room, forbidding her to go a step beyond her daily marketing within a narrow radius of the Rue Git le Cœur.

The wolf, as represented by the gandin or petit creve, was not often on the prowl in this humble locality. The pavements were too rough for his dainty boots, the region altogether too shabby for his magnificence. But from the Sorbonne, from the Luxembourg, and from the Hotel Dieu issued wolves of another and rougher species—students of all kinds; and Rose lived in ever-present fear lest one of these should assail her cherished lamb. Maman Schubert was often too lazy to go marketing; and then Kathleen must needs go alone on her little errands to the green-grocer, or the pork-butcher, or the cremerie.

The cremerie was just round the corner—one of the neatest daintiest little shops in Paris, or at least it was so thought by the inhabitants of Git le Cœur, who patronised it liberally. It was a tiny shop in a narrow street, and one descended to it by two stone steps, trodden hollow and sloping by pilgrims in past ages; for the shop was an old shop, coeval with the departed glories of the Faubourg St. Germain. It was cellar-like and dark, but that was an advantage on a hot summer day. It was cool and shadowy, like a rustic dairy, and it was clean—ah, how it was clean! You might have offered a napoleon for every cobweb to be found in Suzon Michel's shop, without fear of being out of pocket by your offer. The little tables at which Suzon's customers breakfasted were of spotless marble. Her thick white crockery had never a stain or a smear. Her brass milk-cans and tin coffee-pots were as bright as silver in a silversmith's shop.

It was in this half-underground apartment that Gaston Mortemar, the young journalist, took his breakfast every day—coffee and eggs, roll and butter, occasionally diversified by a plate of radishes.

This simple and wholesome fare was enlivened by the society of Madame Michel, a buxom black-eyed widow of six-and-twenty, who had always the last news of the quarter, and a cheery word for every comer, and who found a great deal to say to this particular customer. She stood behind her bright little counter, flashing her knitting-needles, or moved deftly about the shop, polishing and arranging her pots and pans, while Gaston Mortemar breakfasted, and that hour seemed to her always the brightest in the day. By the time he had lived six months in the Rue Git le Cœur, they were on very intimate terms. She used to upbraid him if he were five minutes later than his usual hour, and she would pout and look sorrowful if he seemed in haste to depart. Once she served him a better breakfast than he had ordered, and wanted to supply him with a dainty dish gratis; but Monsieur Mortemar drew the line here. His angry flush and haughty frown told the little widow that she had gone too far.

"Please to remember that I am a gentleman, and not a piqueusisette," he said, "and that I eat nothing I cannot pay for."

Madame shrugged her shoulders, and said it was hard she could not offer an omelette aux points d'asperges to a friend if she liked.

"When I visit my friends I take what they choose to give me," answered Gaston coldly; "but I have no friends in this part of Paris."

Suzon Michel looked as black as thunder, and took the journalist's money in sulky silence. She broke a jug before dinner-time, and was snappish to her customers all the rest of the day.

"What Satan-like pride!" she exclaimed, thinking of her favorite patron; and then she muttered a remark which might have found a place later in the columns of the Pere Duchene.

She cried when she went to bed that night, cried and sobbed, and swore an oath or two by way of solace, before she laid her head on her pillow, thinking that Gaston Mortemar would come no more to the little table at the end of the shop. But at the usual time he walked into her shop, and sat himself down with an imperturbable visage. She served his coffee as carefully as ever, but said never a word. He read a newspaper while he breakfasted, paid, and went, without a word on his part.

The Old and the New.

The old-style pills! Who does not know
What agony they caused—what woe!
You walked the floor, you groaned, you sighed,
And felt such awful pain inside.
And the next day you felt so weak
You didn't want to move or speak.
Now Pierce's "Pellets" are so mild
They are not dreaded by a child.
They do their work in painless way,
And leave no weakness for next day.
Thus proving what is oft confest
That gentle means are always best.

PROFITABLE EXCHANGE.

A cowboy being on the American side of the Rio Grande River, and having an American dollar in his pocket, bought a glass of whiskey, price fifteen cents; tendered his coin and received a Mexican dollar, discounted 15 cents, as change. He then took a skiff, crossed the river, took another drink, tendered his Mexican dollar and received an American dollar as change. He kept up this business all day until too drunk to cross any more, and then remained on the American side with the original dollar in his pocket.

A "BOSS" BRIGAND.

Rosa Sandor, the noted Hungarian brigand, whose exploits have been the subject of many a romance, died recently in the fortress of Debreczin. Born in 1813, he took to the road early, threw trains off the road, pillaged mail bags and travellers, and levied ransoms on the wealthy inhabitants of many of the rural districts in Hungary evading all the research of the police for 25 years. When at last he was captured while sleeping in a vineyard, it was proved that he had allies and associates among the highest functionaries and many aldermen of Pesth.

To Correspondents.

The letter from a Keene correspondent, is altogether too exclusively personal to be admitted to our columns. We would impress upon correspondents the necessity of avoiding offensive personalities. If only evil can be said don't say anything. Of course, glaring breaches of public morals or the law may be excepted. No newspaper, especially a local one, should be made the medium of wanton injury to any one's feeling or reputation.

The Doctor had to travel 300 miles from San Francisco to appear as a witness against him. The bulk of his property was not recovered.

Come to Peterborough.

Mr. S. A. LAWSON, of South Monaghan, writes to the Port Hope Times re the tolls on the Port Hope and Rice Lake gravel road. If it costs Mr. DAWSON and his fellow-farmers fifty cents in toll to draw a load of grain to Port Hope on a road that is next to impassable, we invite and advise them to bring their grain to Peterborough. By so doing they will escape that relic of the dark ages, the toll gate, realize more for their grain and can buy their goods from shops with city stocks and at city prices. Come to Peterborough, by all means.

Complimentary

The Lindsay Post—by the way, an excellent judge—thus alludes to our calendar for 1885:—"The Peterborough EXAMINER has issued during the holiday season a handsome and serviceable calendar, which has been served to all local subscribers and business men. The calendar is got up in "leaf" style, and is bold and effective, and competes very successfully with the many calendars issued by insurance companies in point of mechanical execution and legibility and artistic appearance." We are glad to know that the Post is not alone in its opinion. We have to acknowledge many complimentary remarks of a similar nature.

The Right Man in the Right Place.

We congratulate Mr. A. Elliott on his appointment to the position of up-town ticket agent of the O. & Q. Railway, and also the railway company on having secured the services of a gentleman whose competency is undoubted, and whose courtesy and obliging manner will make many friends for the road. The ticket office is fitted up in the Burnham block, in Mr. Rush's grocery store.

City Band.

At the meeting of the City Band, held in their hall on Monday evening, the following officers were elected:—President, Herbert Smith; Vice-President, C. Huffman; Secretary, S. T. Wood; Treasurer, Enos Dunford. A resolution, moved by A. Freeman, leader, seconded by J. Reynolds, thanking the citizens of Peterborough for the liberal patronage received by the band since its organization, and trusting that by diligent practice they would merit a continuance of the same, was unanimously adopted.

A Carnival Series.

The members of Court Peterborough, Canadian Foresters, have made arrangements with the Curling and Skating Rink Company for the production of a series of grand masquerade carnivals the present winter. The first of the series takes place on Friday, January 23rd, and from our knowledge of the preparations made, and of the Foresters' happy knack of succeeding in whatever they undertake, it will probably, as a carnival, take the lead of anything hitherto attempted in that line. Handsome prizes will be presented, which may be seen in the show window of China Hall. Ladies and Gentlemen en masque are particularly requested to prepare a card bearing the real name and that of the character, and be sure and present it at the ticket office on entering. In no other way can a complete list of characters be secured for publication.

Sad Drowning Accident.

On Thursday afternoon three small boys, Warren Darcy, George Woods and Thomas Bolton, son of Mr. Geo. W. Bolton, plumber, Hunter street, were skating on the ice that fringed the river in the neighbourhood of Hamilton's foundry. Young Bolton a little fellow aged about 10 years, skated too near the open water and went through a weak spot in the ice. Though his companion, George Woods, ran with all haste to bring a board to rescue him, the poor little fellow had disappeared when he returned. The body was recovered during the evening, and the interment took place on Saturday. We join with Mr. Bolton's many friends in sympathy with him and his family in their sad bereavement.

Dr. Sexton on Infidelity.

He will preach in the Murray street Baptist church in the morning, and in the George street Methodist church in the evening. He will deliver his great lectures on Infidelity on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, February 2nd, 3rd and 4th. On Monday evening in the George street church, Tuesday, in the Baptist, and Wednesday in the George street Methodist again. Tickets 20 cents; for the three lectures, 40 cents. Dr. Sexton is brought hither by the ministers of the town, and the receipts from the lectures will be added to the funds of the Y. M. C. A.

Young Mens' Bible Study.

The gathering for Bible study in the Y.M.C.A. rooms, conducted by Rev. A. H. Munro, on Tuesday night, continues to grow in interest, and the session this week was one of the best yet held. The subject was the first chapter of the Acts. The special points dwelt on being the gift of the Holy Spirit, the second coming of Christ, and the appointment of a new Apostle to succeed Judas. At the close of the class a young man stood up, said he should have been in Port Hope that evening, could hardly tell why he had not gone. Happening to notice the sign, he had come into the rooms. He had not cared for the meeting specially at first, but its influence had grown upon him as it proceeded, until he felt the power of the spirit present in his heart, and could understand now why he had been detained. He said he felt compelled to testify to the value of the information and spiritual benefit he had derived. All who attend can bear similar testimony to the pleasing instruction and helpful nature of this gathering. The young men of Peterborough enjoy a peculiar privilege in having the services of so eloquent and scholarly a teacher as Mr. Munro placed at their disposal, and those who do not attend, miss a great deal. A cordial invitation is given to every young man.

Presbytery of Peterborough.

Mr. Torrance presented the claims of the Manitoba College.

The Presbytery approved of the report of of the committee of Assembly on the subject of marriage with a deceased wife's sister, in all its clauses. It approved also of all the regulations in connection with the management of the Aged and Infirm Minister's Fund.

Mr. Beattie, of Campbellford being present was invited to sit with the Presbytery.

Messrs. Alex. Smith, George Peters, and Michael Bar, were appointed Trustees of the church property at Dummer.

The name of the Rev. Wm. White was ordered to be restored to the roll of Presbytery.

A committee, consisting of Messrs. Carmichael, Bell and Cameron, were appointed to draw up a minute, expressive of the high esteem in which Mr. Clark is held by the Presbytery, and the great sorrow at the thought of a separation from him.

The Session Records of Hastings were at tested as carefully and correctly kept.

The next meeting of Presbytery was appointed to be held in the first church, Port Hope, on the 17th March, at 10 o'clock a.m.

In the evening, the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Presbytery of Peterborough, met with the Presbytery. The report of this Society for the year was read by the Clerk of Presbytery. The report showed the existence of nine auxiliaries and three mission bands, including a membership of 340, as compared with 310 last year. The contributions amounted to $798.81, as against $533.68, for the preceding year. Stirring and profitable addresses were delivered on the the subject of Foreign Missions, by the Rev. J. W. Mitchel, of Port Hope, and the Rev. W. H. Jamieson, of Garden Hill.

On the motion of Mr. Clark, the Presbytery agreed to express its deep gratitude for the work that the ladies, within the bounds, had been able to overtake during the past year.

The meeting wat brought to a close at 9.30 o'clock.—COM.

FROM THE PACIFIC SLOPE.

EAGLE HARBOR, KITSAP CO., Dec. 22nd, 1884.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—Hoping that you will allow me a little space in the columns of your valuable paper, I will endeavour to give you a brief description of this part of the world, situated on Puget Sound. I am a resident of the island named Bainbidge, which is nine miles in length by six in width. Port Madison is situated on the north of the island, while Port Blakely is on the south; Both places having a large lumbering manufactory. Port Blakely is also our postoffice, in the same county. Madison mill, when running on full time is capable of cutting eighty thousand feet of lumber per day, while the capacity of the Blakely mill is one hundred thousand feet of lumber per day. The Blakely company employ in the neighbourhood of three hundred men. Madison employs 250 men. There is sufficient water at either place to float any loaded vessel.

Speaking of Eagle Harbor, it is a snug little bay of salt water putting in from the sound, with water sufficient to float deep-water vessels. There is an eastern company that propose to build a lumber mill in the Harbor, which will give employment to 350 men or upwards. Four years ago there were only three settlers on the Harbor, now there are twenty-seven, all of which are liable to tax on real estate. Some of them own a larger tract than others. The Parfit brothers, three in number, formerly of Canada, are a little the largest land-owners around the Harbor. The people, generally speaking, are energetic and industrious. All are striving to make comfortable homes. Some have come here from parts which they left discouraged, almost driven to despair by the grasshopper plague—I have reference to Kansas. However, they find it altogether different here. Mostly all parts of the wooded country on the Sound is timbered alike, fir being the chief lumber in market. There is some hemlock and spruce, also cedar in abundance; of hard wood there is not an over-stock, the crab apple and dog wood, when seasoned, is the most durable. The woods here are invariably thick with undergrowth and bush, so dense that an axe must be carried to clear the way. The land is of a sandy nature, consequently the soil must be enriched by manure, in order to procure a crop. Hay and garden stuffs are the main crop; clover and timothy do well, such as we have in eastern Canada. Game is not over-abundant on the island. There are some deer, partridge and grouse; of bear there is none, but plenty on the main land. Speaking of religious denominations, we have preaching every alternate Sunday. The clergyman is an Episcopalian. We also have a lyceum once a week for evening amusement. The climate here is not severe in winter nor hot in summer, although at present it carries my recollections back to the land of my birth, where the sleigh bells jingled and the snow was crisp under foot, as in days of yore in Peterborough county. We have at present two feet of snow, but it doesn't lie longer than two weeks. Christmas and New Year are upon us with their merry making, when the young and middle aged gather and have a good time generally in tripping the light fantastic toe. Thinking my epistle long enough to be appreciated, I will say, adieu.

FELL FROM A SCAFFOLD.

On Wednesday afternoon of last week, Mr. Geo. Phillips, tinsmith, and his employee, had rather a close call, by falling from a scaffold. Both were engaged in eavestroughing on Clydale's new hotel near the railway station, when the scaffolding on which they were standing gave way, precipitating them a distance of about twenty-five feet to the ground. Fortunately their fall was broken by an intervening scaffold, otherwise, both, no doubt, would have been fatally injured. Mr. Phillips was unconscious for a short time after the fall, and received a slight injury about the wrist. His companion on the scaffold, though considerably shaken immediately went to work again as soon as the scaffolding was repaired.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

We regret to state that Mrs. K. Kemp, of this village, had a narrow escape on Monday evening last. She was in the act of alighting from the evening train while it was in motion, when she unfortunately fell between the platform and the moving train. Before she could be rescued from her perilous position, one of the wheels passed over the toes of both her feet, crushing them severely. Dr. Ford was called to her assistance, who thinks it will be necessary to amputate several toes of the injured feet.

HEATING THE SCHOOL.

Our school authorities have a big job on their hands in heating the new school building. The trustees have paid a large sum of money for a boiler and engine to heat all the rooms by steam and the whole apparatus has proved an utter failure. The boiler has been tried to its utmost capacity, and it has failed to heat even the nearest rooms. In the meantime, the scholars are studying under circumstances that would do credit to an Arctic explorer.

PROTEST.

Mr. John Walsh, one of the candidates for the reeveship of Asphodel, has entered a protest against the return of his opponent, Mr. J. P. Brown, on the grounds of not possessing sufficient real estate to qualify him for the position. Mr. Walsh now claims the protested reeveship.

The Government Seed Bureau.

The seed business began small but last year $75,000 was voted for its support and this year $100,000 is set aside for that purpose. Formerly the business was done in the basement of the Agricultural Department, but two years ago a spacious building was erected for that purpose, which also now shelters the Civil Service Commission, so that the applicants for office have as a soft monotone to the drudgery of their examination papers, the gentle rattle of peas and beans on the floor below.

I went down there the other day to find 160 women and 58 men busily employed in putting up the seed. The men get $1.50 a day and the women $1.25. Mr. Longley, the chief, with a manner worthy of an English Bishop, presides. Every year he buys tons of seeds. Some come from abroad; the greater part are grown in this country. He is constantly on the lookout for new varieties, which are bought, tried by the department gardener, and if a success sent out. Two-thirds of the appropriation he spends in seeds, the rest in putting them up. Half the women paste together stiff paper envelopes for the smaller kinds, and others new cotton bags for the farm seeds. Then boys with different sized scoops fill them, and at long tables other women gum the envelope flap, or with quick stitches sew the bags. Then they are piled up in heaps like a small grist mill, waiting to be sent away. This work is going on all the year. Now the winter wheat is being prepared, to be followed by the cotton seed for the South.

Let me give you an idea of the quantities sent out. During the year just over, Mr. Longley has mailed 3,022,738 packages, all going free. Of these 2,912,730 are given to the Congressmen, although by law they are only entitled to two-thirds. Then the Agricultural Department has a crop correspondent in every county and a general one in each state. The former got 395,905 packages, the latter 72,450, while miscellaneous applicants received 279,653. And so perfect is the system that great books are kept wherein each recipient and what he gets are set down. The seeds are of all sorts, from field corn and potatoes to the rarest flowers. Peas, beans, corn and potatoes are put up in quart sacks, and the flower-seeds in tiny envelopes. The list includes over fifty kinds, while of vegetables there are 128 varieties, and of flowers 131. Last year 2,351,835 lots of vegetable and 563,638 of flower seeds were distributed, turnips ranking next, with 425,858, wheat 69,290, tabacco 114,671, potatoes 12,229, sorghum 34,359, while of the poor, despised sunflower 565 packages were given away. The flowers catch the feminine constituent, and are, therefore, in great demand among the members. Under the proclamation by which the distribution is made, it is stated that the "object of this distribution is the promotion of the interests of agriculture, by introducing into the various sections of the country such new and valuable products as may be adapted to the soil and climate of each." Just how this applies to lilies of

TAKING STOCK!

No duty devolving upon the business man is so pertinent as that of Taking Stock. Books have been called the merchant's repeating clock, to tell him how he goes on. By "Taking Stock" and a comparison with his books, the trader is enabled to arrive at a reasonable computation of the business done during the year, and to tell whether the balance on the pages of his ledger shall be for or against him. It is not only the recognized duty of the active tradesman to "take stock" of his goods, his trade, his custom, but of his competitors.

Just now it is the manifest duty of our citizens to "take stock" of our newly elected Town Councillors to see what are the indications as to the filling in of Spaulding's Bay.

The universal application of the rule is shown in the particularity with which young ladies 'take stock' of prospective matrimonial chances.

In short—tradition, business usage, custom, convenience, and other good and sufficient reasons all corroborate the advisability of "Taking Stock."

This is the month we "take stock," and the balance of our WINTER GOODS will now be cleared out AT COST.

Astrachan Mantles, Ready-made Mantles, Sealettes, Knitted Goods—all kinds.

CHRISTMAS AT "HAZELBRAE."

What a week of preparation there was. First a committee meeting of our lady friends, whose heads and hearts were full of kindly plans for making a "Merry Christmas"; next the grocer's "Expresses" with multitudinous parcels that soon in various stages of mixing and cooking, gave forth most appetizing odors, making the culinary department, for the time the centre of attraction. Then mysterious conferences of the authorities were held as to ways and means of accomplishing certain wished for results with very limited and uncertain resources; and equally interesting if not so mysterious consultations among the children as to the probabilities of sundry secret desires being gratified when the day of special benefactions should arrive. Then the wonder grew larger and larger whether Christmas might, would or could "be as nice in Canada as it was in England"; and the excitement got up to a white heat, when on Christmas eve the gardener, contrary to all horticultural law transplanted a fine evergreen from the adjacent wood to a big tub in one of the bay windows of the school-room. Next came a case of oranges whose golden globes peeped out temptingly as if anxious to contribute to the general fund of prospective enjoyment, then sacks of rosy-cheeked apples that filled the air with mellow fragrance; bags of raisins and sweets, and parcels of all sizes swelled to bursting with soft warm tippets, ties, mufflers and mittens arriving from time to time, kept up the the fever of expectation. On the top of the package brought by our unfailing friend, Mrs. Cox, lay a crisp ten dollar note to be spent in the purchase of special varieties of fruit for our Christmas Tree; and so a great burden was lifted from our hearts, for without it our boy guests would have fared badly. Night and darkness came on at last, as night and darkness will, even before Christmas, but it was much later than usual ere the little white-robed occupants of the domitories finally settled down to quietness and sleep to dream no doubt of the rotund figure and jolly red face of kind old Santa, whose skill in divining their secret heart longings, was so soon to be tested.

A tender carol sung by Miss Wallbridge and the older girls, whose fresh, young voices rang out cheerily from the spacious landing of the stairs, was our first intimation that the eagerly looked for Canadian Christmas had actually dawned, and as the sweet words floated out upon the morning air we felt that the blessed Christ Child was Himself present in the person of each little destitute one, who, but for the protecting shelter and careful teaching of these institutions, would be wretched and neglected beyond all telling.

Mr. Duff took the children to service in the George street Methodist church at eleven o'clock, and during their absence two large tables were laid in the school room for the entire household, who, with all the boys and girls within convenient distance of the "Home," for our Christmas guests, were to dine together in sumptuous style, under the paternal eye of our genial Superintendent. The pretty fir in the bay window became strangely altered during service hours, and before dinner was announced its peculiar, yet tempting fruit had grown so wonderfully that a screen was improvised, lest stray "peeps behind the scenes" should in any sense anticipate the evening's entertainment and neutralize the desired effect of its first appearance.

Judging by the bright faces and merry voices, the rapid disappearance of roast beef, goose, turkey, and other fowl and vegetables, and later of plum pudding, followed by nuts and fruit, the dinner was a great success. The behaviour of our boys and girls was all that could be desired. A couch near the stove had been prepared for our invalid, George Fisher, whose pale face and crutches made him quite an interesting object of attention. As it was the first time the poor fellow had been out of his room since his return to the "Home" for nursing and medical attendance it was a great treat to him to be surrounded by so many joyous faces. Before dismissing the tables, Mr. Duff, in a few kindly, well-chosen remarks, expressed his pleasure at seeing such a happy company about him, and spoke of the intense satisfaction that was felt by all those in charge of the work whenever favorable reports reached us concerning those placed out. A playful allusion to the physical receptivity of some of the lads put all in high good humor, after which the boys were sent out for a brisk walk, in recognition of the fact that exuberant youthful spirits need an escape valve. The girls were then pleasantly occupied in helping to clear away the feast and in discussing interesting bits of gossip as to the Christmas doings, the presents and the pleasures of the different homes in which they were placed. Shortly before the tables were laid for tea our boys had all returned, ready for any amount of fun, and more than ready for the dainty repast about which, as well as the dinner, their graceful hostess had exercised much skilful consideration. Our wee Polly was so charmed with the idea of all having dinner and tea together that she clapped her little hands in delight, saying, "Oh, thith ith nithe, all the ladeeths and gentlemuths to thit wiv uth!" Her little speech delivered in her own pretty unconscious way, set every one laughing, and a brighter-eyed, happier party could hardly be found than that which waited in eager expectation for the unveiling of the tree and the ingathering of its marvellous fruit. The big lads were agreeably surprised to find that a real good pocket knife had been purchased for each of them, and also that a pair of warm woollen cuffs for each had been provided by the ladies of the committee. Jack Frost had taught them to appreciate the comfort of these. Everyone looked pleased, and still the wonder grew how Santa Claus had found out just what each little girl had so longed to possess, because, of course, they had "never told anybody." Blessed transparency of childhood!"

Then we had music and games, and I doubt if the walls of "Hazel Brae" ever echoed with more joyous peals of laughter than these which greeted the mistakes and tumbles of the boys who tried to accomplish various adroit movements in the fun-inspiring games suggested and shared by Mr. Duff and Mr. Owen, who, happily for the lads interested to their care, do not forget that they once were boys themselves. The enjoyment continued, though in quieter fashion, over apples and oranges; then we had singing and prayer, after which our guests took leave and departed, the boys in genuine boyish style, the girls equally merry, but more sedate and under suitable escort.

It was a trying day in many respects, and we grew very weary, but we had much comfort and encouragement through it all. The fact that we had been able to secure a bit of real home-life for our boys and girls was ample compensation for the trouble and fatigue, and the effort required to mix this drop of pure pleasure in the heart-cup of these erstwhile neglected ones, cast the life-current of our spiritual being coursing onward with added thrills of gladness and invigorating power.

Horticultural Society.

Annual Meeting.

The adjourned annual meeting of the Peterborough Horticultural Society was held in the Bank of Toronto buildings on Wednesday evening, Jan. 14th. There was a larger attendance than usual of members. After routine, the president, Mr. J. H. Roper, read the

as below:

To the members of the Peterborough Horticultural Society:

GENTLEMEN,—The Directors beg leave to submit the following report:—The annual exhibition was held on Thursday, 11th September, and the weather being propitious there was a very good exhibit in every department. Special mention may be made as to the vegetable department, which contained some fine specimens of the various kinds of garden produce.

The exhibition of flowers was also very good, the collection being large, and the flowers were artistically arranged, the bouquets being made up with great taste.

The display of fruit was not large, but the collections of apples, plums, grapes and pears, shown, were good specimens, and quite equal to former years, although your directors are quite aware of the difficulty in holding the exhibitions at a time that will be equally favorable to every department of flower culture and fruit.

The Ladies' department was well filled, and contained some exceedingly fine specimens of fancy work.

The number of entries was 294, being an increase on the previous year. The following statistics may be of some interest:

Entries	238	280	294
Prizes awarded	$134.00	$134.25	$123.25

The amount of $123.25 was paid in prizes by the Treasurer on orders granted by the President and Secretary.

The number of members in the society book's is 58, and the balance of cash in the treasurer's hands, as shown by the report, is $140.90, the directors are pleased to report satisfactory.

In conclusion the directors earnestly solicit the attention and generous support in their efforts to promote the society's interest, feeling assured that the value of an organization of this kind cannot be over estimated, its whole aim being to refine the taste and foster an interest in what is beautiful and lovely in nature.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

J. H. ROPER,

PRESIDENT.

Peterborough, 8th January, 1885.

Mr. F. J. Lewis then presented the following

THE MIDDLE STATE.

The Close of the Controversy.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

SIR,—As "Laicus" has had his P.S., I see no good reason why I should not have mine. He was warned that his failures would be recorded, and I now proceed to chronicle a few of them accordingly; and let the reader understand that, when purgatory is named throughout this letter, that it is the Roman Catholic purgatory—the third place shoved in between heaven and hell—that is meant—the purgatory which, it is alleged, is now in operation and does all its work between death and the resurrection, and in which souls are purged while the bodies lie in the grave.

To prove the existence and the necessity of belief in such a place "Laicus" began this correspondence.

But he failed in his object—

Failed to show that his proof takes from Maccabees in anything but a case of "mortal sinners," and therefore inapplicable to purgatory, which is for "venial sinners" only.

Failed to produce the

of the fathers" for one single passage adduced from Scripture, and has thus branded his reliance as an illicit establishment.

Failed to show that one single General Council supported him—a thing which is absolutely necessary to establish any doctrine of his church, so that is the case, as a good Roman Catholic, he has left himself without belief, and absolutely useless as a teacher.

Failed to show that even Trent, his last hope, was a General Council and its canons binding. His statistics in this connection are a perfect puzzle—mere random shots which, like the rest of his references, cannot be verified. There were only 80 millions of Roman Catholics in the world at the time of Trent, and where he gets 222 is a mystery which perhaps infallibility can solve.

Failed to cover the gap of 200 years between Tertullian and the apostles, so that, on the supposition that prayer for the dead means purgatory, he has got no Gospel authority for the superstitious custom, and can build nothing on it but the fact, namely, that the church was at that time drifting into error.

Failed to show between apostles and Augustine one answering to the Roman Catholic one, whose distinguishing characteristics are given at the beginning of this letter.

SINGLE INSTANCE OF A PURGATORY

Failed to show Scripture authority for the Romish distinction between "venial" and "mortal" sin—a distinction without which purgatory could not exist.

Failed to show that there is any room for such a cleansing process as Rome insists on—or anything left unprovided for by God, between the claims of the law which discovers, condemns and exacts the penalty of sin, and the full, all-sufficient, and once-for-all remedy provided in Jesus Christ. This is absolutely necessary in the very beginning, and before purgatory can be even suggested in the case.

Failed to give Scripture proof for the introduction of a third place for departed souls, and has thus left us to the conclusion that Rome it, and forced it in between heaven and hell—the only two places known or spoken of by Christ and His apostles.

Failed to account for the remarkable fact that, the apostles and early converts, whether from Jews, or Greeks, or Romans, if believers in purgatory before,—all renounced the superstition and left it behind them when they joined themselves to Christ—a fact this which shows that it did not then belong to the Christian church, and cannot legitimately now. For centuries this silence was kept up, and was first broken in the shape of a conjecture in the time of Augustine.

Failed to show out Scripture authority for the allegation that the masses and prayers and payments of the living are available before God for souls in purgatory.

Failed to controvert the fact advanced, that no one knew that exit from purgatory could be gained by the payments of those on earth down to the 10th century—a fact which shows that it is

A LATE INVENTION.

Failed to meet my argument from the Liturgies and the testimony of Augustine and Cyril and others, to the fact that the early Christians prayed for all the dead—dividing them into two classes only—those in heaven and those in hell—a fact which shows beyond controversy that they did not know a third place, and which excludes purgatory, until a case of prayer for those in a third place is clearly established—which "Laicus" has not done, and cannot do till after the establishment of the thing by Pope Gregory 600 years after Christ.

Failed to establish the canonicity of Maccabees.

Failed to show that the Jews—the God-appointed custodians and guardians of the Old Testament canon had, by God's authority, been superceded by Rome, and yet offers no excuse for the "lawless" act of breaking through the divine arrangement by and cursing all, far and near, and everywhere, who dared to disagree with them. Can such blasphemy go unpunished?

Could not deny that the preface and canon of Jerome, which reject the Maccabees, appeared in the front pages of all the Bibles published or sanctioned by Rome on to Trent, and that every Roman Catholic priest throughout the world is bound, on the 30th of September in each year, to repeat a prayer in which God is thanked for the illustrious Doctor Jerome as an expounder of Scripture—facts which tell that, in the estimate of Rome, Jerome was above Augustine and all others, the one Master to be followed, and that Rome did follow him till Trent.

By referring to my letters any one will see how all the above points have been dealt with, how that purgatory has sunk in the collision, and that are in the way of ever successfully floating it again, and bringing the rotten hulk into the harbor of the gospel.

And if we add to these failures, any two or three of which spoil his case, the additional fact that he has been guilty of uttering forgeries and unauthorized documents, guilty of slandering Jerome, one of the most illustrious among the canonised doctors of his church, to gain an apparent point for the coming caucus of Trent; guilty of calling the theology of his own church, the very corner stone of purgatory, "unmitigated bosh," when its teaching is directly opposed to his own; guilty of characterizing the prayers contained in the Liturgies used for centuries in his church, as "false," because the argument from them exploded his pet theory, "that prayer for the dead implies purgatory;" guilty of deliberately adding to the Scriptures to pervert their meaning, to cheat and ensnare souls, and to keep up the revenue of the church by extorting "the last farthing."

We say, add all this together, and any man possessed of a very moderate amount of common sense of his cause and the amount of honor earned by this champion of "bosh" and "forgery," and who can so modestly refuse the laurels of victory before they are offered him, and hand them over to the "young layman." Does he think the readers of THE EXAMINER are so "green?" It is not Rome's custom to let young laymen write as Laicus has done. No layman, nor priest either, whether young or old, dare write publicly on such a subject without the consent, if not the direct oversight and help of his superiors. The reader may depend on it we have had an exhibition of all that the highest and ablest authority in the diocese can possibly bring to bear on the case. We have had all that the highest authorities in the whole church can any where, and at any time advance, and a great deal more than the wisest and best informed would venture to put forward over his own name.

The story of the young layman is all moonshine, and is intended to first, that of a scape-goat to take away the disgrace of failure from the real actors in the case, and second, to make the uninitiated believe that the great centre power has not moved in the matter at all, that its arsenal is yet full, notwithstanding the fact that its last cartridge has been raked up and fired.

The role is an old one, but it is far too "thin" to deceive the simplest. Laicus has shown too much anxiety to hide and to keep away from the consequences of his own weakness and failure to be held guiltless. He is evidently conscious of having a wrong cause, and tries to set his house in order to make the best of the result. That he is ashamed of his position and his work is enough for me, the reader can form his own opinion and act accordingly, very much mistaken if the "full fledged parson" has not had the honor of laying a few stripes, by way of penance, on a "full fledged" bishop.

LAKEFIELD.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

COUNCIL MEETING.

The first regular meeting of the Village Council, for 1885, was held in the council chamber, on Monday, the 19th inst., at 11 a.m. The Clerk, Dr. Bell reported that R. C. Strickland had been elected as Reeve, and Messrs. Moore, Cox, McWilliams and Isbister, as Councillors, and that they had taken and subscribed to their declaration of office and qualification.

The Reeve took the chair and called the council to order. All the members being present.

Minutes of last regular meeting read and confirmed.

A communication from F. Clarke, wishing the Council to purchase some grenades for fire purposes was received and laid over for further consideration.

Moved by Mr. McWilliams, seconded by Mr. Cox,—That the tender of Mr. W. H. Robertson, for printing be not accepted, but that the printing be left in the hands of the Clerk to be done where he can get it the lowest.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Isbister, seconded by Mr. McWilliams,—That Mr. William Leonard's tender for council chamber, to cover caretaking, fire, light and all other purposes for village use at the sum of $55.00 per annum be accepted, and it is distinctly understood by all parties that a motion is sufficient notice to terminate the tenancy of the said hall, if at any time this Council consider it to be for the interests of the village to do so, and that the clerk notify Mr. Leonard to that effect.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. McWilliams, seconded by Mr. Moore,—That the petition of Robert Graham, John Richardson and others, asking that this council give notice of a By-law to raise money for the purchase of the Bible Christian church for a town hall, be laid over until next meeting of the council, and the Reeve call a public meeting to discuss the matter and ascertain the feeling of the ratepayers before incurring the expense of submitting a By-law. Also, the offer of A. P. Poussette of the V property, known as mill reserve No. 1, for market place and town hall. Also, as to fire protection, and other matters of interest to the municipality.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Isbister, seconded by Mr. Moore,—That a grant of $5 be given Mrs. Rolliston to assist her in sending a woman and child who are in destitute circumstances from this place. Grant made on the application of J. P. Strickland.—Carried.

The following accounts were paid:—David Smith, work, $2.00; R. C. Strickland, selecting jurors 1884, $3.00. Total $5.00.

Messrs. W. J. Wallace and Wm. M. Graham were appointed Auditors for 1885.

A By-law was passed appointing Mr. Griffin Assessor, and Mr. W. McDonald, Collector, for 1885.

A By-law to amend village By-law No. 80, received its several readings and was passed.

Moved by Mr. McWilliams, seconded by Mr. Cox,—That Messrs. W. J. Wallace, J. Clarin and Samuel Henderson, be appointed a Board of Health for 1885, for the village of Lakefield.—Carried.

The council adjourned to meet at the call of the Reeve.

CHANGES.

The Village Council and School Board will in future hold their meetings in Leonard's Hall. The Division Court will also be held in the same place.

VITAL STATISTICS.

There were 18 marriages, 38 births, and 17 deaths registered in the village in 1884.

TOBOGGANING.

A toboggan club has been organized here, and quite a number have received "slippery machines." A good slide has been obtained to the east of the railroad, and it is fun to see some of our staid old codgers enacting their boyhood days over again by toiling up the steep hill for the fun and excitement of sliding down again.

FORESTERS.

Court Lakefield, No. 43, C.O.F., meet in their hall, on Thursday evening. Seven or eight new applications are now before the Court, all good men, and more to follow.

YOUNG'S POINT BRIDGE.

Two car loads of iron from the Toronto Bridge Co. arrived here last week for the new county bridge, at Young's Point. It has been taken from here on sleighs, and no doubt the company will proceed with the work at once, as the present bridge is not safe, and will be closed after this date.

SCHOOL BOARD MEETING.

The first meeting of the School Board was held in the council chamber on Tuesday evening the 13th inst. Present, Messrs. Gordon, Dench, Casement, Dr. Armour, Caldwell, and W. J. Wallace, the newly elected member.

The secretary called the meeting to order. Dr. Caldwell was elected chairman for the ensuing year, and thanked the Board for the honor they had just conferred upon him; he would discharge the duties to the best of his ability.

Mr. W. H. Casement was elected secretary-treasurer, and Dr. Armour and Mr. W. J. Wallace, managing committee for the ensuing three months.

The following accounts were paid: Isaac Watson, sawing wood and repairing side walk, $1.70, James Brown, repairs, $4.12. An account of S. Henderson, $1, for repairing chairs, was received and laid over till next meeting. Mr. T Casement presented an account of $2 for holding the school election.

Some discussion as to the legality of a member of the Board receiving a fee took place. Mr. Casement contended that it was quite proper. It was decided to get more information on the matter before taking any action.

The chairman, with [illegible] Board, read from the by-[illegible] borough School Board some rules which he thought would be well for the Lakefield Board to adopt in some form. At present there were no written rules to guide the Board, which at times gave rise to misunderstandings.

The Board adjourned.

NEW SUMMER RESORT.

Steps have been taken by some of our go-ahead citizens to build a summer resort in Lakefield or immediate vicinity. A meeting was held in the council chamber on Thursday the 15th inst. for the purpose of forming a joint stock company, Mr. R. C. Strickland in the chair. There were from $1,000 to $1,500 stock subscribed, and the following directors appointed:—Messrs. R. C. Strickland, G. W. Strickland, Thos. Gordon, A. J. Wright and W. H. Casement, Mr. J. Crickmore, solicitor. The stock is fixed at $10,000 in shares of $25 each. Lakefield is favorably situated for a summer resort and offers many facilities for pleasure and recreation during the summer months. Should the enterprise meet with as hearty support as its promoters expect, by the month of June next we may expect to see a fine Hotel with beautiful grounds ready for the reception of tourists. The scheme will have, at least, the good wishes of the citizens of Lakefield.

OUR SNOW PLOUGH.

On Saturday last our new snow plough was tested and did its work satisfactorily, the whole of the sidewalks being cleared for the small sum of $1.50. Mr. Hugh Fitzgerald has the contract.

NEW ARRIVAL.

Messrs. Gemmel and McKee, of Peterboro' are placing their machinery in their new premises which have just been erected especially for them. A carding and woolen mill was much needed here, and there can be no doubt but that the new enterprise will be a success.

SHEBOGGANS.

We saw a very pretty pair of sheboggans the other day, made by Mr. McWilliams for W. Wright of this place. They are a piece of first-class workmanship and a credit to the maker and the village.

ENNISMORE.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

On Wednesday the 1st inst, the residence of Thomas Telford Esq. of this township was the scene of another happy event by the marriage of his second youngest daughter, Elizabeth, to Mr. William Foord of Peterborough. Relatives and intimate acquaintances of the family to the number of about fifty, commenced to arrive early till about five o'clock when the happy event was solemnized by the Rev. A. E. De St. Dalmas, Smith. The bride was dressed in wine colored silk with ornaments to match. Her younger sister, acting as bridesmaid, was dressed in wine colored velvet. The young people enjoyed a pleasent night tripping the light fantastic toe to the enlivening strains of Joseph Reynolds of Peterborough whose name is a sufficent guaranty of the style of music supplied. The bride was the recipient of a large number of elegant and useful presents, and only when the the luminary of day shed his rays through the eastern sky did the pleasant party after many wishes of long life and happiness to the newly wedded couple, conclude to return to their respective homes.

PETERBOROUGH, JAN. 22, 1885.

Tabernacle Sermons.

Discourse by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage.

An Earnest Call to Immediate Repentance.

Dr. Talmage preached this morning, Jan. 4, in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, on the subject "Acceleration." The opening hymn was:

"My days are gliding swiftly by,
And I, a pilgrim stranger,
Would not detain them as they fly.
Those days of toil and danger."

Before the sermon Dr. Talmage read passages of Scripture contrasting ancient longevity with the brevity of modern human life. The text was: I Samuel xxxi., 8, "The King's business required haste." Following is the sermon in full:

The cradle of 1885 rocked on the grave of 1884. All intelligent people, whether Christian or un-Christian, are thoughtful about the closing of one volume of time and opening on another. The striking of a clock is always suggestive, but the most tremendous stroke the clock ever gives is when on the night of the 31st of December it strikes twelve. I think all of us who have anything to do feel that we must swiften our pace. Acceleration! In my text David appears before Abimelech without sword or food or usual attendants, and gives as his reasons for this unseemly appearance that he was on urgent, imperial business, and had no time to properly accoutre or equip himself. "The King's business required haste."

My friends, we are all instructed with some part of the King's business, and our great need is to have our speed accelerated. God seems to be a Being of infinite leisure. He sometimes takes twenty-five hundred years to do one thing; though in six days he put on the world the final touches that made it inhabitable for man. Geologists tell us that uncounted ages passed between the laying of the corner stone of the earth and its final completion. God took this unimaginable reach of time for work that he could have done in three months. He had plenty of time for everything. With an eternity behind Him and an eternity before him, there is no flurry, no precipitation, no haste. But so far as we are concerned, what we do must be done in brief time and in the quickest way "The King's business requires haste."

Christ is our king, king of glory, king of Zion, king of saints, king over all the earth, king of Heaven. He is a king that shall never die. Where is Louis XIV.? Dead? Where is Richard III.? Dead? Where is Ferdinand? Dead? Where is Peter the Great? Dead? At the door of the grave lies a whole shaft of sceptres. Death sits in the palace of the sepulchre, and the potentates of earth are his cup-bearers; and, as the old blind monarch staggers around his palace, ever and anon he trips on some new fallen coronet. They sat up Charlemagne in his grave and put a crown on his pulseless temples and a sceptre in his lifeless hand; yet that could not bring back his kingdom. But our Emperor lives. He existed before the world was made He shall continue after it is burned up. King Immortal.

The French Government thought itself rich in having so many palaces—St. Cloud and the Tuileries and the Versailles and the Palais Royal and the Luxembourg; but our King has the whole earth for his palace—the mountains, its picture gallery; the ocean, its fountain; the sun, its chandelier; the midnight heavens, its candelabra; illimitable forests, its park; the glories of the sunrise and sunset, the tapestry about the windows; the storms, the lightning hoofed coursers dashed up and down the heavens: all the glories of the land and sea his wardrobe; all the flowers of the field his conservatory; all the fish of the sea his aquarium; all the birds of the spring morning his orchestra. But, better than all these, the hearts of his people on earth and of his saints in heaven, are the palaces in which he delights to reign, King universal!

Like other Kings, he has his army and navy. Fighting on his side are the hurricanes of the great deep—as in the breaking up of the Spanish armada, the volcanoes of the earth—as in the burial of the infamous Herculaneum? the fire—as when Sodom was deludged with conflagration; the rocks—as when they crushed their terrors about the crucifixion. The Psalmist counted the flaming artillery of heaven, as it came rushing down the sky and cried: "The chariots of God are twenty thousand. Elijah's servants caught a glimpse of them among the mountains—a calvacade of flame. The cherubims on his side; the seraphim on his side; the archangles on his side; King Omnipotent.

We do not have to wait for public occasions. Any hour of the day or night, without introduction, we may press into his palace, tell our wants and secure his help. Going before other Kings we must have a court dress, rightly cut and rightly adorned; but beggars may come before this King in their rags; and the prodigal, filthy from the swine herd, is immediately ushered in. A pardoning King! a condescending King! a merciful King! O, Jesus live for ever!

It is on the business of such a king that we are all sent. It is the business of compared with it, all other business is a holiday and a sport. If a man go into some financial operation by which he looses a hundred thousand dollars, and his house and estate drop out of his possession, and his failure upset the next man, and his the next and the next, until the whole land quails under the panic, the disaster is insignificant compared with the ruin of that man who despoils his own soul, and by example takes down another and another until all worlds feel the defacation. William the Conqueror pulled down forty-six of the churches of God, in order that he might enlarge his park for game. So men may tear spiritual things that they may advance their sensuous and worldly gains. But the great day of eternity will reveal the fact that the most important of all business on earth and in heaven, is the King's business.

The King's business is not only important, but immediate. If we do not attend to it quickly we will never attend to it at all. Here is a Christian man expecting some day to be thoroughly converted. After a while he will become diligent in searching the Scriptures and in prayer. Meanwhile the day of grace is going. It will soon be gone. Get with your Bibles and begin to read. Down on your knees and begin to pray. For the business of the store and of the shop and of the field you are neglecting God's business. Your soul is losing its best, perhaps, its last chance. Up men! The King's business requires haste.

In the day of the world's doom, what will become of that man who had a thousand Sabbaths and ten thousand opportunities for usefulness and a million chances of being made better, but comes to the gate of eternity a pauper in Christian experience, and with but one sheaf, though all his life he was walking in golden harvest fields? You have postponed your higher life until God tells you you will not come to it if you postpone any longer. The King's business requires haste. There is to be done. If it is not done speedily it will never be done. Yonder is a heart breaking. Now is the time to say the healing word. Go next week with your balsam, and it will not touch the case. A man yonder came under your influence, and you might have captured him for God. You will never have another chance at him. To-morrow another man will be under your influence. You will have but one opportunity of saving him. It may be at 10 o'clock, at 12 o'clock, or at 3 o'clock. Miss that and you miss it forever. Do not say, "Wait until the next time." Next time will never come. Be prompt and immediate. The King's business requires haste.

In the city of Basle, Switzerland, it was the custom to have all the clocks of the city an hour ahead of time, for the following reasons:—Once an enemy was moving upon the city, and their stratagem was to take the city at 12 o'clock, noon; but the cathedral clock, by mistake, struck one instead of twelve; and so the enemy thought that they were too late to carry out the stratagem and gave up the assault, and the city was saved; and therefore it was arranged that for many years the clock struck one when it was twelve, and two when it was one. O, man and women of God, engaged in Christian work, set your clocks on, if you want to save the city; better get to your work too early than come too late. "The King's business requires haste."

We are exercising

we sit calmly in churches meditating about how to save the world. Meanwhile six millions of people will die this year. You might start the milenium next year, but it would do them no good. What you do for them you will have to do within a twelvemonth. What you do for them you will have to do this month—aye, this week! Aye, this day! Have you never heard that a neighbor was sick and said to yourself: "I must go and talk with him about his soul, for I know he is not prepared to leave the world." But that day you were busy and the next day you were busy and the third day you went to see him. You pulled his door-bell, a servant came out, and you said: "How is he to-day?" The answer was: "He is dead!" You say: "It cannot be possible. How long has he been dead?" She answers: "Five minutes." God have mercy upon that Christian man who comes to do his work five minutes too late. The King's business requires haste.

I pray God that my text may be brought home with special power to those in that audience who have never yet sought Christ. As many of the causes that come up in court are adjourned, sometimes because the witnesses are not ready, and sometimes because the plaintiff is not ready, and sometimes because the judge is not ready, until and hard to pay. No, there are men and women who have adjourned the cause of the soul's salvation from youth to middle life, and adjourned it from health to sickness, and adjourned it from prosperity to adversity, until there will be an infinite bill of costs to pay. O, procrastinating, deliberating, halting soul! Let me tell you that the King's business requires haste! Before you attend to it your mental faculties may fail. Your intellect works admirably now; but in this country the ratio of intellects that are giving out is larger every year. Something in the climate urges men on to such extremes and the pressure on active men is so great, that before they are aware of it the brain softens, or more suddenly, the mind drops dead from its throne.

Pythagoras, studying philosophy, was so anxious to keep awake and improve all his time, that with a string he tied the hair of his head to a beam above, so that the very moment he nodded in sleep the pain would awake him. So there are men now who have such morbid and unhealthy notions about how much work it is necessary to do, that they never take any rest. They cannot stand the stress. The most brilliant are in the most peril. What if the mind, that God has given you for high and holy use, should perish before you have found Christ! A heavy fall, an accidental stroke on the head, a sudden affliction for which you are not ready may kill your intellect, and so your last chance for heaven pass away, though you should live on for many a year.

In the great populations that

or are carefully guarded in private dwellings, are hundreds of men and women who expected some day to be Christians. They had abundance of time, they thought; but mental disorders dropped upon them before they had decided the matter, and although now they are irresponsible and shall not be brought to account for anything they do under this mental eclipse, yet they shall at last be called into judgment for the long years of mental health when they neglected the Gospel. What will become of them I leave you to judge. While your reason acts, put it to the grandest use. Look out how you carry the magnificent torch of your intellect, lest God put it out in darkness forever. The King's business requires haste.

I would have you regard the text because you may have come near to the end of God's patience. There can be no doubt that some men in youth or mid-life or old age, so aggravatingly reject the Gospel that God lets them alone. They slam the door of their soul in God's face and tell Him to begone; then when they call after Him to come back, He will not come. Eternal affront had been given, and in that book where no erasures are made, the man's name is put down among the doomed. Cross the line that divides God's mercy from His wrath—step but one inch over and you are as badly off as if you went ten thousand furlongs. Before the iron bolt fastens the door against you, you had better go in. Before the last boat sails for heaven, you had better get on board. Haste thee out of thy sin into the pardon of God. The King's business requires haste.

Have regard to the suggestion of the text, because your LIFE MAY UNEXPECTEDLY TERMINATE.

We are trading on a borrowed capital of years that may in a moment be called in. There is no map of the great future into which we are travelling. No explorer has been ahead and come back to tell us how it is. Each one feels his way along the path, not knowing what moment a devouring lion may come from the jungle. There are so many ways of getting out of life; by fall, by slip, by assassination, by malaria, by overexertion, by insidious disease, by misplaced railroad switch, by rotten bridge, by fractious horse, by falling wall. No man goes when he expected nor as he expected. Suddenly the pulses stop dramming the life-march. Suddenly the curtain falls and the lights are put out. We change worlds more quickly than we do our clothes. Like one tick of the watch we are in time; the next we are in eternity. What if we die before we are ready! What if, with all our sins unforgiven, we rush into the presence of the omnipotent God before whom sin is utterly loathsome! Can you imagine the chill of that moment or the horror of that undoing! What! Twenty, thirty, forty years to repent in and yet not have attended to it. Beyond the dead line there is no rectification of blunders. In the grave there is no place to pray. The rider on the pale horse spurs on his steed, and in a moment he may be pounding at the gate for admittance. What thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might. Do it now. The King's business requires haste.

There is a sea flower called

which spreads abroad its petals beautifully; but it is very poisonous; and the little fish that touches it struggles but a moment and then dies, and other petals of the same flower floating in the water, wrap around the fish and pull it down into the deadly bosom of the flower. That is what is the matter with some of you. She is an attractive flower, and it glows and waves beautifully before the soul; but no sooner do you touch it than you are poisoned and must be swallowed up, unless we may sweep you away and sweep you up in this net of the Gospel. Don't you see that the things of worldliness are setting against you? Don't you see that there are influences at work to destroy you forever; Haste ye to Jesus, the only refuge. The next moment may be worth to thee an eternity. The King's business requires haste.

Hear this music that drops straight from Heaven: "Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

"Art thou weary? art thou languid? art thou sore distressed?
Come to me, saith One—and coming, be at rest.
If I ask Him to receive me, will He say me nay?
Not till earth and not till heaven pass away.
Winding, following, keeping, struggling.
Is He sure to bless?
Saints, apostles, prophets, martyrs, answer—Yes!"

Draft Horses.—40 Years Experience.

A. S. Chamberlain, for 40 years proprietor of the Bull's Head Stables, New York City, in reference to the values of different breeds of draft horses, said:

"I keep exchange and sale stables for horses. Don't deal on my own account to any extent. All classes of horses, amounting to several thousands annually, come to my stables from all sections of the country. A large number of these are draft horses of the different breeds, the Clydesdales, the French horses called Percherons or Normans, the English and Belgian. There seems to be a larger demand for the French horses than for any other breed

"Some years ago we used to get a great many horses from Upper Canada. These were Clydesdales, and would weigh from 1,400 to 1,600 pounds, but they did not seem to answer the purpose; as a general thing their feet were thin-shelled and flat, and being heavy horses their feet would become sore, and would no stand the pavements. The French horses have good feet and stand the pavements better than the Clydesdales. That is the reason they sell better.

"I would advise the farmers and breeders who are breeding horses to sell on the New York market for draft purposes to breed from the French horses in preference to all others."—Chicago Tribune.

The best horses to be found in France are recorded with pedigrees in full in the Percheron Stud Book of that country.

At the great importing and breeding establishment of M. W. Dunham, Wayne DuPage Co., Illinois, hundreds of the finest specimens of this famous race can be found at all times.

Catarrh A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished, he claims the Catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favourable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.—Montreal Star, Nov. 17, 1883. 48-52t

A MARVELOUS STORY

TOLD IN TWO LETTERS.

FROM THE SON: "38 Cedar St., New York, Oct. 2n, 1882.

"Gentlemen: My father resides at Glover, Vt. He has been a great sufferer from Scrofula, and the inclosed letter will tell you what a marvelous effect has had in his case. I think his blood must have contained the humor for at least ten years; but it did not show, except in the form of a scrofulous sore on the wrist, until about five years ago. From a few spots which appeared at that time, it gradually spread so as to cover his entire body. I assure you he was terribly afflicted, and an object of pity, when he began using your medicine. Now, there are few men of his age who enjoy as good health as he has. I could easily name fifty persons who would testify to the facts in his case.

Yours truly, W. M. PHILLIPS."

FROM THE FATHER: "It is both a pleasure and a duty for me to state to you the benefit I have derived from the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Six months ago I was completely covered with a terrible humor and scrofulous sores. The humor caused an incessant and intolerable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the SARSAPARILLA in April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 73 years of age. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them, as I have here tried to tell you, AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Glover, Vt., Oct. 21, 1882. Yours gratefully,

HIRAM PHILLIPS."

MR. BLAKE'S GREAT SPEECH

Delivered Before the Young Men's Liberal Club.

THE AIMS OF LIBERALISM.

A Thorough Exposure of Conservative Failure—Our Unfair Fiscal System—How the Tariff Discriminates Against the Poor—The Assisted Passage Grievance—State of the Labour Market in Our Great Cities.

The following is a full report of the speech of Hon. Edward Blake at the meeting, in Shaftesbury Hall, under the auspices of the Toronto Young Men's Liberal Club, on Tuesday evening last:—

Mr. Blake, on coming forward, was greeted with round after round of cheering. He said:—Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen,—It is always a great privilege to a public man to be permitted to express, to any portion of his countrymen, his sentiments upon the public affairs of their common country, but I confess that it is with peculiar pleasure that I avail myself of the opportunity given me to address a meeting under the auspices of the Young Men's Liberal Club of Toronto. (Applause.) I have always regarded the politics of a free country, as the noblest occupation of the citizens of that country, and I have always believed that it was essential to the fullest development of the nobler part of politics that there should be an early apprenticeship on the part of the citizen to that, his noblest duty. It has always been my earnest wish, therefore, that the young Canadian should, at a very early time in his life, begin that active interest in politics which it is the part of every good citizen to take, and as long ago as ten years or more, I took an opportunity of making a proposition in that sense and based upon that view, for the enlargement of the franchise of Ontario, which resulted in the adding of a very great number of the young men all through the rural parts of the Province to the rolls, who otherwise would have been for a long series of years excluded from the franchise, and which resulted, further, in increasing the number of the electorate of Ontario to a point higher than in any other Province, except one, which possesses manhood suffrage. I think the results of that legislation have demonstrated its wisdom. (Cheers.) It was based upon the proposition that the franchise was, when properly viewed, an elevating privilege, and that it was, therefore, of the last consequence that at the earliest period at which the process of reflection and argument were available, the citizen should be trained to the exercise of the franchise. Now, I have said that I regard politics as

and yet I have been especially anxious that the young should early take a part in them, because, although they be the noblest occupation of the citizen I know it is often defiled, and it is very important to all of us that the generous aspirations of youth should mingle with our efforts, and it is all important that the youth of the country begin to participate actively in the politics of the country and do so upon sound and elevated principles. They should aim high. They must remember, as we all ought to remember, that there may be dear-bought victories, and that it is better to lose in the right than to triumph in the wrong. (Loud applause.) They must, as youth will, I think, be only too willing to do, agree that the end does not justify the means, they must be willing to assume as their rule of action in politics that no double conscience should divide the man and the politician. (Loud applause.) Now, we are living under a free system of Government, which is worked upon the principle of party. There are many men who lay to that principle the great and admitted evils which permeate our political system. I am not blind to those faults, nor am I blind to the fact that the excess of party zeal tends largely to produce them. I see—we have all seen—incapacity and even crime condoned; I have seen fraud justified; I have seen legislative iniquities—such, for example, as the Gerrymander Act of last session—(loud applause) approved and applauded; and I have seen all these things done largely in the name and for the interest of party. (Applause.) But I say that these are not inseparable from the principle of party government. (Applause.) I say such things as these are, some of which might have been paralleled in the history of English representative institutions, would be impossible in the England of to-day. Notwithstanding the severity of party strife, notwithstanding the acrimony and bitterness which unhappily prevail, and have for the last few years prevailed in England, the things to which I have referred are impossible there. If you want proof of it take the Redistribution Act now or shortly to be placed before the English Parliament, and the Redistribution Act, so-called, passed in the Canadian Parliament of 1882. Look at the principle of action prevailing in one case and in the other. Look at the fact that in one case the power of

was deliberately used in order, if possible, to crush the minority out of existence, while in the other the principles of redistribution were agreed upon by the mutual assent of the two great parties (loud applause), and you will see that in a country in which party government prevails, justice and equity, and honor, and liberal notions may yet also prevail. So with reference to the general code of political morality. Contrast the English code with that observed in Canada. Contrast even the code of the United States with that observed here—far inferior as that is to the English. Look at the case of Colfax; look at even later and larger cases which I might name, and see for yourselves once again that party spirit does not necessarily annihilate the sense of honor or justice. And, after all said, party government I believe to to be inevitable for the reason that you will have an organization at any rate on the side of the Government. The Government of the day, to whatever views it may adhere, is the nucleus of an organization. It holds place, power, patronage, and has the machinery for consolidating its adherents, and it does not seem to me possible that there should be any effective check upon the course of government unless there be an organized party in opposition. Nor am I able to advise any better means for the ascertainment of a true, and sound, and reasonable view of things that discussion which goes on when measures are treated from opposite points of view by a Government and an Opposition. But I say that the thing has its evils and grave evils, that it is liable to abuse and great abuse, and that the young who are entering upon the discussion of political affairs and are taking their part should recognize that, and in the spirit which you, Sir, intimated a few moments ago, engage in the discussion of political questions from an independent standpoint, and with an earnest desire to reach the true, the sound, the just conclusion. For my own part, I have been some seventeen or eighteen years in public life. I have sat for some three or four and twenty sessions in one House or the other, and I have never given a vote or pronounced an opinion which I would ask my constituents or my fellow-countrymen to approve of or condone, because it was a party vote or opinion. (Loud cheers.) It is upon the merits of those votes and opinions that I have attempted, and ever will attempt, to vindicate their soundness. I rejoice, I need hardly say, in the establishment of this Club. I hope that its membership, large though it be as you have just mentioned, will be more than doubled within a short space. (Loud applause.) It ought to be in a city of this magnitude, more than doubled. I hope you will proceed to justify by your activity, your existence. You have to SET AN EXAMPLE.

There are many other places in which Young Men's Liberal Clubs may well be established. There are places in the country in which it is better to adhere to the old system of old and young going together, in which it is difficult to get sufficient members conveniently close to one another to establish different organizations. No such difficulty exists here. There are many other places in which no such difficulty exists, and where numbers, and convenience, and proximity are such as to enable different organizations to be formed, and in these places I favor the formation of numerous organizations. You have work before you, studying the public questions of the day, preparing yourselves by practice for the discussion of those questions upon the platform; you have the practical work of carrying your opinions and convictions to a successful issue by taking that part which knowledge and trained activity can take in the organization of your party—in seeing to the registration of the votes, seeing to getting out the votes, seeing to the formation of a sound public opinion amongst the masses of your fellow-citizens and electors. There is in this city, Conservative though it be, a great Liberal force. (Loud applause.) There is a Liberal force sufficiently strong to do great things, even in Toronto. There is a Liberal force strong enough to be of great and valuable assistance in spreading Liberal principles and carrying them to a successful issue in the surrounding constituencies. We Reformers of the Province of Ontario must never forget, what I am frequently reminding you of from the platform, that our force amongst the people is relatively greater than the force which the so-called Redistribution Act permits the people to send to Parliament on the Liberal side. You must not forget that under all the unfavorable circumstances of the late election circumstances which I shall not now particularise—our political force compared with that of our opponents was almost as 45 to 55, as evidenced at the polls. You must not forget that that popular force, great as it was then, is greater now, that not many months elapsed after the general election before that series of events began which have been sounding even in unwilling ears the truth of the views which we have been pressing upon the people, and that, at this time the subjects which formed the principal topic of debate at the late election are discussed in altogether a different spirit, and that altogether a different temper prevails in the ranks of the adversary. It is any longer to certain apparent facts as proving beyond controversy the soundness of their policy. From a period within a few months after that election had taken place, and up to the present day, circumstances have been accumulating, facts have been coming forward, events have been precipitated upon the minds of the impartial and the intelligent in favour of the conclusion that a mistake was made in 1878 and repeated in 1882. (Loud cheers) I maintain that the almost even balance which existed between the political parties in Ontario in 1882 has now been reversed, and that the preponderance of sentiment is with the Liberal party. I cannot forget, nor can I lose the present opportunity of referring to losses which we have sustained. Within the last few days we have sustained grievous losses. We have lost from the ranks of our party, from our fellowship as citizens, two men who were well known to most of you, and whose reputation had spread far beyond the bounds of the city which they called their home. We have lost James Bethune and William Johnston. They were young Liberals not so long ago, and early in their lives they assumed a prominent place in the councils and ranks of the Liberal party. In 1871-2, those critical years in our Provincial history, James Bethune valiantly contested and won the county of Stormont, when it was of the last consequence to the Liberal party that not a county should be lost. I at that time, engaged actively as I was in these Provincial politics, felt under great obligations to him for the course he took. In the year 1882, ten years afterwards, when the Liberal party, crippled by the Act to which I have referred, and by an election precipitated upon it unexpectedly, was forced without preparation to enter into the contest, William Johnston volunteered for the fray. He offered to take charge of the organization of Ontario for the election, and he labored as few men have labored, as few men could labor through that contest and the one which followed a year later. We owed to them gratitude for their services in the past, we owe to ourselves not to forget in any short time those services but to keep their memory green, (Loud applause.) They were both besides being political friends, personal friends of mine. They both happened to be students in my office, and to have received their professional training there, and therefore I feel as one who has lost two of his best personal friends, and as a public man share with you the feeling of sorrow for their loss. I trust that will remain enshrined in your hearts, and that the lesson they taught us will not be forgotten. They took an active, honourable, noble, manly part in the political life of their country. They worked while it was to-day, and may we not say of them as it was said by a great man of political friends gone:—

"From the eternal shadow rounding.
All our sun and starlight here,
Voices of our lost ones sounding,
Bid us be of heart and cheer.
Though the silence, down the spaces,
Falling on the inward ear.

Let us draw their mantles o'er us,
Which have fallen in our way.
Let us do the work before us,
Cheerily, bravely, while we may,
Ere the long night-silence cometh,
And with us it is not day."

(Loud and prolonged applause.) Now, Mr. Chairman, there are many topics, each of which deserves a speech by itself, which I might address you upon. There are many questions of a most pressing character. The constitution under which we live was settled, unfortunately, without an appeal to the people, without that threshing and sifting, and crucial discussion in Parliament, in the newspapers, and at the polls, which it would have undergone had that appeal been taken. It was settled very largely by a public man, who was avowedly of the opinion that it was a mistake, that the union should have been a legislative, not a federal union, and it bears unmistakable marks of that handiwork. There are defects and inconsistencies which would not have appeared had it been submitted to the test of public discussion. You have alluded, Mr. Chairman, to one defect—the Senate. As Senate, we have—we, living in a democratic country, in an age of democratic principle a legislative body not elected directly or indirectly by the people, but appointed by the First Minister and appointed for life. The Senate was said to be, when first established, the representative of the sovereignty of the Provinces, and the special protector of Provincial rights. And yet the members are appointed by the person against whom (on the theory of protection for the Provinces) that protection would be needed. (Loud applause.) The First Minister of Canada, whoever he may be, controls the majority of the House of Commons and the legislation of the country. He infringes, we will say, upon Provincial rights, and the Senate is to guard against that—and yet he appoints the watch dogs. (Loud laughter and applause.) Now, I say we ought to have a Senate responsible to and elected by the people—(great applause)—small in numbers, and with proper checks and safeguards which have been devised and which could easily be made to avoid those difficulties which the great objector—there is always an objector to every change—says will arise through having an elective Senate. There is another thing. The Provinces have the power to revise the Constitutions and to amend them in all respects except in that which concerns the link between them and the Federal body—the Lieutenant-Governor. But the Dominion of Canada has no power to

REVISE HER CONSTITUTION

at all. Neither the people nor the Parliament of Canada can amend the Constitution, either with reference to the Senate or anything else. I maintain that that is a great disadvantage. (Cheers.) We ought to have inherent in us the power to revise and amend our Constitution as from time to time may seem necessary, with proper safeguards, no doubt, for the rights of the Provinces, as they exist in the United States. At the present time, no matter how much you might like to change the Constitution, you do not know that it would be done, for it is dependent upon the action of the Imperial Government and Parliament; and no matter how much you might desire not to change it, the change might be made because it depends upon the action of that Government and Parliament. Then there is another thing, which grew, I believe, largely out of the circumstances to which I have referred respecting the adoption of the Constitution, and that is the division of the judicial powers. We have the large body of our laws made by the Provinces. These ought to be administered by the Provinces which make them. The Courts are created by the Provinces, but the judges are nominated and paid by the Federal authority. It is an utterly illogical and absurd mode of managing the matter. (Cheers.) I maintain that when you have a legislative body which makes the laws, you ought to have in the same Province the power to administer those laws by means of Provincial officers responsible to the people whose laws are to be administered. (Loud applause) Then we have the great question of Provincial Rights, which may be summed up, perhaps in the question of the principles upon which the disputed power of disallowance should be exercised. To what end is it that you have a Local Legislature, and that you go through the turmoil of Local election to send representatives to that Legislature to make laws if, in those matters which are confessedly within the jurisdiction and the exclusive jurisdiction of that Legislature, and in those laws which do not affect the general interests of the Dominion, your legislation is not supreme? (Cheers. I say it would be better for you—because the truth is always better than a sham—to

than to submit to a power of revision and disallowance of laws upon those subjects which are committed exclusively to you as a Province, and your laws on which do not affect the general interests. (Applause.) The principles of responsible Government are violated at their root by such disallowance. If such disallowance took place in England, of Canadian legislation we should be aflame, and should insist that we ought to govern our own affairs, and the same rule applies as between one of the Provinces and the Dominion as applies between the Dominion and the Empire, with reference to domestic legislation. Even though we have a written Constitution, a large part of the Constitution is unwritten, and depends upon the spirit in which it is interpreted and administered. That is the case, as you know, entirely, as to the British constitution which is unwritten. In this question of disallowance it is all important to understand the spirit in which you should expound our Constitution. Expound it on the federal principle on which it is recited, that it is made, and you will reach one conclusion, expound it in the spirit of legislative union and you will reach another. That is not a question for the lawyers, therefore it is not a question for the Courts, but it is a high and important and yet very plain question for the people at large to settle at the polls. (Loud cheering) Look, for example, at the question of granting licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors—(loud and prolonged applause)—and you will find in that a proof of the propositions I have just been advancing. You will find an effort made at Ottawa to construe your Constitution in a centralizing spirit, to construe it in a spirit which minimizes the attributes of the Local Legislature and magnifies the attributes of the Federal Legislature. But, when we find that ever since the Constitution was a Constitution for the seventeen or eighteen years in which we have been living under it, the Local Legislature acted upon the right to make laws upon a particular topic, and the central Legislature did not interfere with the exercise of that right, can we ask more cogent or plainer proof of the understanding of the people as to what the meaning of their Constitution was? I ask whether, except in case of urgent and absolute necessity, a meaning which was expounded by 18 years' practice should be attempted to be violated. Well, it was attempted to be violated, and upon the very doctrine to which I have referred—that of necessity. It was announced to us that that we are all wrong, and that our Constitution made it something wholly different from what we all, except a few of us, one being the late Minister of Justice of Canada, had supposed, and that now it was found that the jurisdiction was at Ottawa, and not with the Provinces, and that of necessity we must act. We disputed that proposition. We said that nothing of the kind had been discovered, and we said more—supposing you are right, and the jurisdiction is with the Dominion, what we ought to do is to take steps to make the Constitution agree with the common sense of the people as to what it was, instead of proceeding to violate that common sense. (Loud applause.) We were told, nothing of the kind shall be done, our amendments were expelled, and a law was passed, based upon the idea that such a law was necessary, taking the control of the liquor traffic, so far as could be done, into the hands of the Dominion. Then the next year the event which we anticipated came to pass, and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council decided that the local laws on this subject had efficacy and vitality—were not the waste paper we were told in the city of Toronto they were. (Loud and prolonged cheering.) Then we pressed upon them to repeal their law, since the argument of necessity was shown to have no force No, the second act of the drama was gone on with. We were told that, as a matter of policy, this law should be kept upon the statute book, if by some hook or some crook, some cunning devices of the lawyers, the jurisdiction could be held by the Dominion, though the Provinces had adequate jurisdiction. An arrangement was made for the statement of a case to the Supreme Court to ask its decision upon the question, and it is only this morning you have heard that the unanimous judgment of that tribunal in all the disputed points, the point with reference to the liquor licenses, except wholesale and vessel licenses, which may be put to one side, the law of the Dominion is void. (Tremendous applause.) Now there, you see, we have triumphed under the Constitution. But I want to say to you to-night, on the very night of that triumph, that the most important question is the other one which I put to you—the question of policy. In what spirit shall we act at Ottawa? Shall we, after it has been established, after 18 years experience of all the Local Legislatures, that a particular attribute is theirs, and when it has been decided by the Courts that they have that attribute, struggle to deprive them of it? ("No, no," and applause.) Shall we go on litigating further if we can by some hook or crook to find something that shall take away that power from them and give it to the central authority? I say No. (Cheers.)

THE TRUE UNIONISTS

in this Canada of ours, with its three thousand miles of extent, with its sparse population, with its diverse nationalities and interests, are they who recognize the principle of local laws and local powers in the widest and most generous spirit. (Loud applause.) I say that it is by recognizing the fact that the people in a vast area of territory can most effectually legislate for themselves in the great masses of questions, that we shall promote a real union in those things in which we have really a common interest. And, if there be one instance above another in which local excitement, local opinion, is important in deciding the expediency and efficacy of a law, it is upon that question in which the attempt has been made and will be persisted in, I fear, to take away the power of the Local Legislatures and legislate for the whole Dominion at Ottawa. (Loud and prolonged applause.) I congratulate the Liberals upon the series of triumphs which have attended their efforts to establish the federal principle and to enforce federal views. But, I say to them, their work is not done, so long as those persistent efforts to administer that principle go on, and that we must set our faces as flints against those aggressions which have been made in the past and will be persisted in in the future, and that our duty to is essential to the prosperity of this Canada we love. Now, Mr. Chairman, there are other questions upon which I would say a few words, because I have to deal with some pressing questions which have been before us for some years—are before us this night for decision. There is the question of commercial treaties. We have believed for a long time that it was extremely important that we should enlarge our foreign markets. Both parties have agreed upon this. The party in power proclaimed that it was one of their most earnest objects to enlarge our foreign markets by making arrangements with divers countries. They have been in power for a good many years and have not succeeded in taking the first step as yet in the enlargement of the market. (Laughter and applause.) On the contrary, the markets seem to be narrowing rather than enlarging. I have argued that an important step towards success would be the

DIRECT NEGOTIATION OF COMMERCIAL TREATIES.

(Loud and prolonged applause.) My opinion is that there are business affairs which are best managed by those who know most and best about the business. They involve discussions with reference to advantages and disadvantages. The commercial and fiscal policy of England differs widely from ours; their lives are different, their views are different. It is necessary only to look to their public despatches upon analogous questions to observe. We have found it stated in Parliament that we just missed a most advantageous convention with France by twenty hours, because our then Agent-General at Paris had to refer it to the Foreign Office in London. Before the answer came the happy moment was lost, and the treaty was lost too. That has been stated by the First Minister at Ottawa, yet he says it would be a great harm for Canada to have power to negotiate treaties direct. In that case it would not have been harm. It has been said to me, "How do you expect you will be able to enforce your treaties by war unless you negotiate it through the medium of the British Ambassador? Well, I never should propose to enforce a commercial treaty that way. (Applause.) I am rather a man of peace myself, at any rate, but the idea of insisting that if a commercial convention is broken you will go to war about it, seems to me perfectly absurd. (Applause.) It is said that we are too small to engage in commercial treaties advantageously. It depends upon the advantages of a treaty whether we will negotiate it or not. It does not depend upon our size, which is respectable, our numbers which are considerable, or our trade which is not to be despised, but upon the question whether the other party thinks it is a good bargain to enter into or not. It seems to me the arguments against our position are entirely fallacious, and that common sense and experience alike indicate that a step in advance would be taken if Canada had the power to make her own commercial treaties. (Loud applause.) All these things, however, these constitutional questions, and those affecting the future of our country, we shall settle wisely and well if we recognise the great leading principles upon which we should govern. I have said that for Canada one of these is the full and ample recognition of the federal principle. And I say generally, that for Canada, as for the Provinces of Canada, is the second great principle. We are not to forget that we live in a democratic age, and that we are one of the most democratic products of that age. (Applause.) All over the civilized world, for the last twenty-five years, it has been plain to the observer that there has been approaching what is called the reign of the common people. Ever since the series of revolutionary movements which agitated the continent of Europe a few years ago, it has been marked, even in those old-world monarchies, buttressed round as they were by the great feudal buttresses and ramparts, and overborne as the people were by heavy taxation and enormous forces of armed men, as the great movement that has been going on. And here in this happy land, these difficulties have never supervened, you have had no feudal ramparts to batter down; no standing army to over-awe you; no great aggregation of wealth or power in few hands; no hereditary aristocracy, no reason why here the democratic principle should not be applied. (Loud applause.) It may go upon two lines, and upon this continent both are being tried—the presidential system on the other side and the system of British freedom which, for my part, I have approved and advocated as being in this country. It is being tried here under circumstances more favorable than at the moment exist in England, yet in that Old World you see how strong the democratic spirit is. Within a few days the great Prime Minister of England will have consummated that grand measure under which the electorate of the United Kingdom will be increased from three millions to five millions. (Great applause.) You will see a representative Government always, when there was a great question to be decided which move the heart of the people democratic, but still under ordinary circumstances aristocratic under the great power of the peers and the unhappy arrangement of the electorate districts and the restricted franchise, which subsequently become plutocratic, and is to be now democratic by the combined effect of enlarged franchise and satisfactory redistribution of electoral districts. (Loud cheers.) Now the democratic principle has the greatest possibilities for good, and whether we believe in it or shrink from it, we have to face it. If the experiment has got to be tried, then, that it may have a chance to succeed to the uttermost—and all good men wish it to—it is our duty, and especially is it the duty of the young and active, to see what are the dangers to be guarded against, and what are the real principles to be enforced. (Applause.)

THE DEMOCRATIC PRINCIPLE

Hereditary Scrofula.

Are you aware that in your blood the taint of scrofula has a prominent place? This is true to every one. It is liable at any time, on the slightest provocation, to develop itself in some insidious disease. Consumption and many other diseases are outgrowths of this impurity of the blood, Shaker Blood Syrup has a wonderful power over all scrofulous troubles, as the remarkable testimonials we have received unmistakably prove.

We refer by permission to Mrs. P. Elliott, Hanover, Maine, who was cured by Shaker Blood Syrup of 11 Scrofula Sores, the severity of which confined her to the house for two years. Six months previous to taking Shaker Blood Syrup, she could not get about her room without crutches. Her friend says I did not think it possible for her to live many months she was reduced no a mere skeleton. Her cure is hardly less than a miracle. There is no doubt that in Shaker Blood Syrup, we have the most remarkable medicine that has ever been produced, and a positive cure for Syphilis and Scrofula in their numerous forms.

Ayer's Hair Vigor improves the beauty of the hair and promotes its growth. It imparts an attractive appearance, a delightful and lasting perfume. While it stimulates the roots, cleanses the scalp, and adds elegance to luxuriance, its effects are enduring; and thus it proves itself to be the best and cheapest article for toilet use.

PETERBOROUGH, JAN. 22, 1885.

Hon. Mr. Blake's Speech.

On our third page will be found the first instalment (the remainder to appear next issue) of the great speech delivered in Toronto before the Young Men's Liberal Club. Don't fail to read it.

Bent on Obstruction.

Sir John Macdonald shows a disposition to play the part of obstructionist and factionist as long as possible. Even though opposition to the singularly unanimous decision of the judges of the Supreme Court in the license matter, is hopeless, he seems to be determined to hold on to the slender shreds of reputation as a great constitutional lawyer left him. Besides, the quashing of the Usurpation License Act leaves him in a painful "pickle." Pestered with hordes of office seekers he hailed his now defunct license act as a splendid means of satisfying these place-seeking cormorants. Now they are all thrown on his hands again with stronger claims. He will now have to provide for them, and, as a means of delay, has determined to risk the last desperate chance left him. He will appeal from the decision of the Supreme Court to the Judicial Committee of of the Privy Council, meanwhile retaining the services of his license inspectors, at the public expense, of course. The expense of keeping these bogus officials in pay, and of carrying the matter to the Privy Council will be enormous. But what cares Sir John? It is no new thing for him to sacrifice the public interests in the most reckless fashion to his own purposes. What cares he how much the country is bled to pay a horde of bogus officials? What cares he how much the liquor dealers are embarrassed? He has gained his point in respect of the latter. He got their support in 1882 by promising to pass a License act in their interests, and little he cares now how much annoyance and expense they are put to. A part of his object will be gained if he can prolong the unsettled state of affairs he has created in Ontario in respect of the license question. It will answer a part of his object if he can give annoyance to the Mowat Administration. Whatever public interests may be sacrificed the purposes of himself and party are to be promoted.

England Advancing.

It is rather flattering to Ontario that in a matter of such vital importance as her educational interests, England is following the example of this Province. Our Tory friends raise a great outcry against the control of our educational matters being subject to the authority of a department of Provincial administration. It is quite in harmony with Conservative principles to advocate an irresponsible bureaucracy, and to oppose the placing of our educational matters under the control of the people themselves. No doubt the English educationists have maturely studied the Ontario educational system before they decided as they did do, to place their own education in charge of a Minister of the Crown. The Reformers of Ontario argued that the head of the Education Department should be a member of the Government and, as such, responsible to the people for the administration of his Department. If the Minister pursues a policy hostile to the interests of the people, the latter have it in their power to make their objections practically known, and to dictate the policy that they prefer. With a Superintendent, irresponsible to the people, the latter would be powerless and would have to submit to whatever course such Superintendent might see fit to follow. The English authorities see things in the same light, as is shown by the course the British Government has elected to pursue in educational matters. In the light of the success that has attended the making education a Department of the Provincial Government, a similar course of action in England cannot be considered an experiment. Under Hon. G. W. Ross' active and practical administration the Department is showing remarkable efficiency, and the British Department, under a man like Sir Lyon Playfair, may be expected to yield similar satisfactory results.

The constituency of Lennox has long been known as a purchasable commodity; it is no wonder then, remarks the Stratford Beacon, that the Dominion Government elected their candidate there last week. Mr. Pruyn's majority was about 40.

The Head and Front of it.

The Conservative journals still attempt to discuss, or, rather, distort the school reader question. The ostensible ground they take is in the interest of the booksellers, and the effect their declamations will have in the improbable event of their being heeded by people who think, will be to show that, in order to give the booksellers a larger profit, the people will have to pay from five to ten cents more each for their school books. The true Tory principle—bleed the people for the benefit of the few. But the real object these journals have in view is the manufacture of political capital—to discredit, if possible, the Mowat Administration, and to strengthen, if possible the heterogeneous elements of the Ontario opposition. The agitation against Hon. Mr. Ross' exceedingly satisfactory arrangement, with respect to the new readers had no doubt a party origin. It has no popular element in its composition. It is no spontaneous protest from the great party interested—the public. It was conceived in the councils of the Tory party, born of splenetic faction, and suppositiously fathered on the booksellers of Ontario. The latter cannot be blamed as business men for seeking to secure the best and most profitable arrangements for themselves. It is a peculiar, but not unnatural circumstance, that the large majority of the booksellers actively protesting are Conservatives, and it is difficult to disbelieve that they allowed their political sympathies to exaggerate their trade grievances for the sake of emphasizing the clamour of Tory politicians, against the Education Department of a Reform Administration. We are led to expect that the Opposition will bring up the matter in the Legislature, when, no doubt, they will succeed as indifferently as they did last session when their attempt to carp at and discredit the administration of the Education Department, covered them with confusion.

An Appeal for Justice.

We disclaim any intention of recognizing the utility of the Dominion Senate, or approving of the manner of the appointment of its members, when we submit the claims of this district to representation in that body. We believe we are correct in saying that this is the only district north of the lake front that is not favored by supplying a Senator. Belleville district has, indeed, a double share, and the other districts are well represented, while this district (including the Peterboroughs and the Victorias) is, figuratively, left out in the cold. There seems to be no excuse for the manner in which we are overlooked. There are now several senatorial vacancies; but if it is not considered fair to do justice to Peterborough, at the expense of any other district, it may not be amiss to remind Sir John that, in the course of nature, a vacancy may occur at any moment in this vicinity, in which event our claims have an indisputable precedence. On the grounds of political support we are entitled to a senator, and also on the higher grounds of justice as between all localities. If senators are to continue to be appointed we submit, on behalf of this district, that its claims to being recognised are too strong to be ignored. And we shall be all the better pleased if a resident of Peterborough or these ridings should be selected.

An Important Matter.

Our news columns contain the announcement of the appointment of a large, influential and representative deputation in South Monaghan, to confer with the town and county councils of Peterborough. The object, as stated, is "for the purpose of ascertaining if anything can be done to improve the communication between the two places" —Peterborough and South Monaghan. This brief statement implies a great deal, and involves interests of great importance to every citizen of Peterborough engaged in business or substantially interested in the town or county. It is to be hoped that both the town and county councils will cordially welcome the deputation, and deal with its objects and propositions in a broad and practical spirit of liberality. Especially would we advise our town fathers against the folly of throwing a sprat to catch a whale. To our business men the securing of a constituency of patrons of the size and wealth of South Monaghan is a prize worth competing for, while to the county, the possibility of more intimate municipal relations will present a pleasant and profitable subject of consideration.

Editorial Notes.

The Dominion Parliament meets on Thursday January 29th.

Dr. Dowling has again been selected as the Reform candidate in South Renfrew.

The Scott Act will be submitted to vote in Northumberland and Durham on Feburary 27th.

The Licensed Victuallers have made Sir John Macdonald an honorary member of their society.

Hon. C. F. Fraser, commissioner of Public Works, is in New York, on account of the serious illness of his wife.

"Moses Oates" has joined the staff of the Toronto Meteorological Observatory. We shall now have the kind of weather we want.

At a meeting of farmers in Kingston, it was decided to ask the Legislature to establish an Agricultural College in the eastern portion of Ontario.

The Protectionists can now point with pride to one new industry, indisputably fostered by the N. P. London, Ont., has opened a soup kitchen for delaying the starvation of paupers.

Dr. Clarke, of the Toronto Lunatic Asylum, states that there never was a case of typhoid fever generated in that institution. and the reason given is the perfection of the drainage and plumbing.

We regret to learn that Senator Simpson is lying dangerously ill at his home at Bowmanville. He has stricture of the œsophagus, and has not been able to partake of solid food for some time past.

Friday last was a great day for the Scott Act. It was carried in four counties with, in most, overwhelming majorities. In Kent the majority was 2,012, with not a single polling division giving a plurality of votes against it. In Lanark, 413. In Brome county, Quebec, the majority was 580, and in Lennox and Addington 28, with two places to hear from.

Sir John's admirers laud lavishly his speech at the Montreal banquet. And well they may. It was on a subject on which almost any man speaks eloquently and fluently—himself. An occasional allusion to the red breeches and spangles, relieved the monotony of the vacant tissue of egotistic bombast ever uttered by a public man.

The Tory papers call on Hon. G. W. Ross, Minister of Education, to explain the arrangement for the issue of the new readers, and when he does explain, these journals refuse to believe him, and go on telling the most absurd falsehoods in order to discredit the transaction. If the truth hurts the Conservative party, the journals are ready to apply the salve of the ready lie.

The Toronto Globe of Saturday apologises for paucity of cable despatches, laying the blame on the storm prostrating the telegraph wires. This shows how much the Globe is behind the Mail. The Mail would have a full dose of "special" cables whether there was a cable or not. It has a good supply of "padding" on hand and keeps the factory in good working order.

Prof. Fowler, the great phrenologist, will have to discharge his "capper." While in Toronto he "felt" the bumps of Mr. Bengough, and told him he had a great fondness for drawing. Now this Bengough was not Grip's cartoonist, but Bengough the short hand writer, who can't draw anything—not even his salary sometimes, for he is connected with the press. Humbug sometimes finds a home with the greatest minds, and sometimes forms the basis of great reputations.

Evidences of the grossest bribery and corruption at the recent Dominion election in Lennox, far surpassing that for which Sir John Macdonald was unseated, is, says the Ottawa Free Press, forthcoming. Mr. Pruyn will not only be unseated but disqualified, and as the disqualification may also extend to individuals who are principals in these transactions, Ottawa's voters list at the next general elections and the list of available Tory candidates will be minus one.

One result of the decision of the Supreme Court that the Usurpation License Act is ultra vires, is to make the Inland Revenue Department of the Ottawa Government responsible for the enforcement of the Scott Act. Incidentally this judgment declares the constitutionality of the Scott Act. No doubt Sir John is sorry that he opposes the Scott Act. If he had favored it he might have claimed that he was constitutionally correct on one subject.

How the N. P. does boom wages! An advertiser in a Toronto daily paper wants a "gentleman capable of taking entire control of an office and five or six assistants; must be a good correspondent and understand book-keeping, banking and commercial transactions, and must deposit from $500 to $1,000 cash with the firm as security—wages $500 per year!" Applicants must "enclose stamp" for reply. Here's a splendid chance for somebody that's growing rich to fast by sawing wood.

The pet charge against Mr. Laflamme, personally by the Toronto Mail—that of ballot box stuffing—is to be legally investigated. Mr. Laflamme is suing the Toronto organ of the brawling brood of bribers and slanderers for $10,000 damages. The last libellous article is headed "Improved Methods," and insinuates that the ex-Liberal Minister invented an improved ballot box for "standard elevating." The probabilities are, says the Ottawa Free Press, that the Mail has slandered Mr. Laflamme so long with impunity, that it has convinced itself that its falsehoods were truths.

CULPABLE CARELESSNESS.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

SIR,—With your premission I should like to allude to a matter which concerns the ratepayers of this Village. I allude to the matter of the heating apparatus of the new School building. The culpable carelessness of the School Board has led to a great waste of public money. The heating apparatus elaborate and costly as it is, proves to be utterly useless and the people from that fact are put to the expense of buying five new stoves, in addition to the already extravagant cost, of the useless heating apparatus. The buildings have cost much more than was anticipated, and the resulting taxation is no light matter, but when legitimate expenses are swelled by gross carelessness, it is time that public attention was called to the matter. Your truly,

RATEPAYER.

PORT HOPE'S BLIZZARD.

The Guide says that on Friday night Port Hope and vicinity was visited by one of the most violent wind storms ever experienced in this section; it was quite equal to what is reported of a Manitoba blizzard. A good deal of damage was done in town and surrounding country. Several of the new stained glass windows of the First Presbyterian church were broken by the force of the gale. One family residing in a three-storey brick dwelling on Walton street were compelled to vacate their sleeping apartments during the night, because the windows were blown in. Buildings in all parts of the town suffered more or less. The Methodist church at Welcome had its roof injured by the falling of one of its chimnies. Many barns and sheds in the surrounding country were unroofed; Mr. Israel Gobeen, 5th concession of Hope, had a couple of large sheds entirely stripped. The iron roof of the life boat house was blown off. Trees and fences on all sides were laid flat. The iron chimney of the Midland work shops was also blown down.

James Brown, 2nd concession of Clark had four head of cattle killed by the falling of the roof of the barn in which they were housed.

"Little, but Oh My."

Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets" are scarcely larger than mustard seeds, but they have no equal as a cathartic. In all disorders of the liver, stomach and bowels they act like a charm. Purely vegetable, sugar coated, and inclosed in glass vials. Pleasant, safe and sure. By druggists.

The Earl of Aylesford died in Big Springs, Texas, last week, of inflammation of the bowels. The remains will be sent to England. He was a large property owner in Texas, and carried $1,-000,000 insurance on his life.

KEENE.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Sleighing at last.

No end of merry-makings in consequence.

The glazing of the large windows in the new church is at a stand still, owing to the indisposition of Mr. Kerr, the glazier who was attending to it.

The whole of the upstairs windows are to be done in stained glass, and will be fine enough for a Cathedral.

The Victoria Brass Band were entertained royally, by Mr. A. McIntyre, on Wednesday of last week, at his residence on Second St. The new house-holders were well serenaded, then lunch was served and the party left in high spirits, wishing Mr. McIntyre and his bonny bride, all the good things possible in this uncertain life.

The Otonabee Agricultural Society met in the Town Hall, on Thursday, the 8th inst.

Wm. J. Millar was re-elected President. Geo. Reese, 1st Vice President, and John Gillespie 2nd. The directors are Thomas Blezard, M.P.P., Hugh Nelson, A. Mitchell, J. Redmond, Dr. Massie, Andrew Nelson, Wm. Drummond, Thos. Thompson and J. Carter. Secretary, Jas. M. Drummond. Treasurer, Geo. Reid, Esq. Auditors Wm. Lang, Alex. Campbell, jr. The usual business was gone through, and the Treasurer presented his report which showed a deficit of $26.00. It is to be hoped that the society will make extra exertions the coming year, so that the report may show a surplus instead of an insufficiency.

We are going to lose Miss Minnie Gallon, and our village will not soon replace her. We must not grumble, however, as she is to assume higher and happier duties; but we send with her all possible good wishes, in which all Keene heartily joins. And we hope her future life may prove as prosperous and satisfactory as she could wish, and that every blessing may attend her. Miss Gertrude Gallon will conduct the music class till May, when she too will leave us, and we shall look in vain, we fear, for substitutes for these talented young ladies.

[The Keene correspondent of the Hastings Star is greatly troubled as to the identity of our excellent correspondent at Keene. We might say for his information that the publisher of THE EXAMINER is responsible for what appears therein, and also that our correspondent was never "bounced" from the Hastings Star or any other office. Our Keene news letters are reliable, accurate and well-written. If the correspondent of the Star were as reliable in his alleged facts and as correct in composition as our representative at Keene, that paper could boast of a sensible and trustworthy contributor. Our correspondent's name is not "Lydia E. Marshall," and to the people of Keene, who, with one or two exceptions, mind their own business, it makes no difference what the name may be. —ED. EXAMINER.

NORWOOD.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

A BLAZE.

A blaze occurred at McGregor's Hotel here on Monday evening that nearly resulted in a serious conflagration. About 7:30 one of the boarders of the hotel discovered a flame of fire proceeding from the door of a small room under a stairway used for a stow-away. Speedily an alarm was given, and a number of willing hands with pails of water worked hard for about a quarter of an hour before the incipient fire was extinguished. The lower floors were deluged with water, and did considerable damage to the ceiling and contents of the dining-room. The loss is estimated between $200 and $300, which is fully covered by insurance. Much credit is due to the water-pail brigade, who worked like Trojans to master a threatening disaster to our village, as on account of a strong wind prevailing at the time, nothing could have saved a valuable portion of Peterboro' street if the fire had gained much further progress.

ANOTHER BLAZE.

On the same evening a lamp in the store of Mr. R. Foster burst, and set fire to a lot of valuable articles in his shop window. Fortunately the blaze was conquered, and beyond the damaged goods in the window, no further loss was sustained. Mr. Foster's loss, which will amount to about $10, is covered by insurance.

COUNCIL MEETING.

The first sitting of our new village council was held on Monday last, when the new councillors elect took the necessary declaration and oath of office. The principal business was the election of officers, which created, a little amusement and not a little discussion, before disposed of; the following were elected officers for 1885:—W. H. Mullins, Clerk, salary $35; J. W. Clark, Treasurer, salary $10; Hugh Spence, Assessor, salary $20; James Calder, Collector, salary $30; Dr. Ford and Thos. Burke, Auditors; W. H. Stephenson, Trustee; Jas. Kellett, Janitor, salary $20. The salaries of the Clerk and Collector have been increased.

SCHOOL HEATING.

After a prolonged trial the heating apparatus of our new school building has burst its boiler, and stoves have replaced the useless, costly appendage which has been experimented upon at a cost of $500.

FROST BITTEN.

A man named Patrick Sheridan, of Havelock, suffered so severely from being frostbitten on Sunday last that he had to have the whole of his fingers of the right hand and two fingers of his left hand amputated. Dr. Ford attended the sufferer, and successfully performed the operation

Slightly Mixed.

"I'm a whoopin' old gorilla from DeKalb county," he proclaimed to the awe-stricken pedestrians, as he made a clean sweep of Whitehall and Alabama streets, "an' when thar's a muss 'spected, ye can count on this roarin' ole brimstone chawer to do his an' a dozen other galoots' shar of fitin." All day he promenaded the thoroughfares, trying to raise a rumpus with some one, and trying to raise the hair off of his head with "crooked water."

Just as the shades of night were drawing the curtain of darkness about the city, says the Atlanta Constitution, he paused in front of a lamp-post and, after eyeing the light a few moments, incoherently asked if the prescription clerk was in.

"Wazzer masher wi' ye?" he growled, as no reply came to his query, "donsh yer know Ish shick'n need 'tonshun?"

No answer was elicited by this piteous appeal, and the exasperated hero determined to "tar ther durned thing all ter pieces."

With a wild yell, he made a terrific onslaught, and to his surprise, landed on the other side of the street.

"Well, I shwar," he muttered, gazing back toward the lamp-post and rubbing his bruised body anxiously, "reckon better lem 'lone 'n zat drug sthore; 'cause man wha' can jirk me in fronsh door 'n fling me out back door zat quick ain't to be fooled with."

J. H. Earl, West Shefford, P.Q., writes: "I have been troubled with liver complaint for several years, and have tried different medicines with little or no benefit, until I tried Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, which gave me immediate relief, and I would say that I have used it since with the best effect. No one should be without it. I have tried it on my horse in cases of cuts, wounds, &c., and I think it equally as good for horse as for man."

Judgment on a Hot Mexican Dish.

Some time ago Col. Milbank visited Mexico, and, upon returning, declared that the Mexicans are the only people in the world who know how to cook. "Why," said he to his wife, "their dish of 'chessly' is excellent. You take a handful of bird-peppers, mix a little meal, and stew 'em up. Of course it's hot, and, especially with a stranger, seems to be composed of three parts fire and one part torment; but after a man gets used to it, why there's nothing that has such a tendency to promote digestion. It undoubtedly prolongs life, keeps the mind active, and tends toward a general promotion of good feeling. I have brought home a sack of those peppers, and at every meal after this I shall expect my favorite dish."

Bird-pepper entered into the Colonel's daily diet. No one thought of sharing the dish with him until several days ago when old Uncle Sam Blackamore of Red Fork township came to the city and called at the Colonel's house. The old man, while at dinner, noticed the host dipping into what appeared to be cooked tomatoes, and, during an animated discussion into which the subject of a literal place of orment in the world to come entered strongly, he reached over and helped himself to a spoonful of stewed pepper.

"Now," said the old fellow, lifting a good-sized blaze on the point of his knife, and holding it near his mouth until he should reach a semicolon, "I am a little quar in my belief, and don't hesitate to say that the wicked will be roasted like a 'possum——"

He dropped the knife, wiped his tongue on his coat-sleeve, and, without speaking, he "hauled off" with a sauce bottle and knocked the Colonel down. The Colonel, being resentful and impetuous, arose and discouraged old Blackamore's familiarity by hurling his favorite dish into his visitor's frank and open countenance. A hand-to-hand encounter ensued, resulting in the defeat of the Colonel and the subsequent arrest of the old man. The case was taken to court, and tried by an eminent Justice of the Peace, a jurist whose idea of justice rarely meets with reversal, except when it chances to fall under the severe gaze of a judge who knows the law.

When the lawyers had closed their arguments the old Justice killed a horse-fly with a paper-cutter and said:

"This court is ready to deliver its opinion. The court holds that the defendant had a right to visit the land of the Montezumas and Cortezes, and while there had a perfect right to form a taste for the dishes prepared by the inhabitants of that country. This court furthermore holds that the defendant had a perfect right to prepare the dish and eat it under the American flag; in other words, he had a right to put it on his table."

"Then I understand," said the lawyer for the plaintiff, "that you have decided in our favor?"

"Just wait, if you please, until this court has concluded the decision. In order to be thoroughly prepared to judge the case wisely, this court ordered and tasted a sample of the stuff brought from the depraved land of the Montezumas, and this court is prepared to say that a man who wouldn't knock a fellow down for placing such a hidden mine of explosive compounds within his reach ought to break out with the nettle-rash and be deprived of the right of suffrage. This court would advise the plaintiff to keep out of the defendant's way, but will say that, if the defendant don't catch him and maul the eternal pizen out of his disposition, he will lay himself liable to a fine and the odium of being considered a blamed fool by this court."—Arkansaw Traveler.

The New Orleans "Aunties."

The pure feminine negro is seen in and about New Orleans in all her old-time glory. You see them in the kitchens, on the streets, in the horse-car, everywhere anybody is seen, and there is a similarity that is wonderful. They are almost universally fleshy, without visible necks, the head resting on a comfortable cushion of fat on the shoulders, with enormous arms, partly bare, and no waist whatever.

They are abundantly fleshy at 50 and still more so at 60. What they would be at 100 may never be known.

Old and young, fleshy or lean, the love of color is over all of them, and the color they wear must be pronounced. Their blacks are the blackest of anything on earth, their yellows cannot be too yellow, and the various shades of red must all be as bright as possible. No one color satisfies them. They mingle all of them, and the more that can be crowded into a pattern the better it pleases them.

It is a pleasant sight to see an aged negress rolling along the street, bearing a basket or bundle, her mouth halfway open so that the laugh that is very close to the surface may find the outer air with the least trouble, with good humored twinkle in the eye and lurking in the wrinkles about her mouth, her short petticoats displaying two ankles immense in size, and about her head the inevitable gayly-colored handkerchief wound in the shape of a turban.

Without this turban the dress of no negress would be complete. It takes the place of hat or bonnet, and is as universal as the petticoat or shoes. Indeed, it is more the thing than shoes, for, though one may lack in the matter of shoes, she always has the turban. It is bound closely about the forehead, just below the hair, or rather wool, line, and tied or pinned neatly at the back of the head. Under this wealth of color the shiny black face, the dazzling white teeth that always show, for the laughter either begun, in progress, or just ending, displays them, make a not unpleasant picture. So jolly and good-natured are they that one does not wonder that white children, cared for and almost reared by these colored women, came to love their "mammies" in childhood, and continued the liking as long as they lived.

The streets of New Orleans would not be complete without the negresses and their turbans. They fit the bright sun, and the flowers, and the foliage exceedingly well, and make a sort of variegated finish to the picture. And that color will always be there. The race is increasing with great rapidity, and there is no reason why it should not. The young require very little care in that delicious climate. They are turned off to shift for themselves at a very early age, and a pickaninny is as little trouble to its mother as a colt is to its dam.—Chicago Tribune.

Every one has heard of condensed milk, but condensed, or rather solidified, drinks of a more potent nature are a novelty. An ingenious French chemist has discovered a method by which any wine, spirit or malt liquor can be solidified into a cake, like chocolate, and so conveniently carried in the pocket of the tourist.

FOUND OUT.

And you will always be true to me, darling?"

"As true as steel."

Need we say that the two speakers were of opposite sexes? He, dark and tall, with black penetrating eyes; she, small and fair as a lily. It was evident that he loved her dearly, but it was easy to see that he was a jealous lover, and would make a stern and exacting husband. Truth to tell, Maud feared him quite as much as she loved him.

They were in a grassy dell, in a small wood with a roof of tender green leafage overhead. With a lover's freedom he kissed her ripe red lips again and again, little thinking that there was a witness to their love-making.

"My darling," he cried, drawing her fair head down on his shoulder, "I love you more than life; if you were false, the joy of my existence would be gone for ever."

"And what makes you love me so dearly?" asked Maud, looking up admiringly at her strong handsome lover.

"I love you because you are young, fair, and innocent," replied William Clayforth, "and because I know you have never loved before—that your red lips have never been touched by any lips but mine. Do you know, darling, that I could not love a woman if she had ever had another sweetheart."

"And have you never had a sweetheart?" she asked curiously.

"If I had, men are different from women," answered William evasively. "If I ever told any other woman that I loved her I told a lie."

"I am afraid you have been very gay," said Maud laughingly, "but I like you all the better for that. We women admire Don Juans, you know. A boy's first love is always insipid.

"Is it really so?" asked William doubtfully. "Then I do not regret being rather wild. You women are such rogues, it is hard to resist you. To tell you the truth, you are the first really good woman I have ever met."

"Sir, you will not add to my good opinion of you if you libel my sex," replied Maud with mock severity. "You are so handsome, I don't wonder that women fall in love with you."

"Don't talk nonsense, little one," observed William; "I have come here to speak seriously—to tell you something which I know will make you very sad."

"What is it?" asked Maud, nestling closer up to her lover. "You look serious; nothing dreadful has happened?"

"Nothing dreadful, darling," replied William; "I have only come to tell you that I must leave you for a time. It will not be for long."

"Oh, Will, I cannot bear to part with you for a moment; I like to be close to you—I like you to kiss me."

"Do you, little one?" and he kissed her white forehead.

"Curse him!" muttered the man, shaking the bushes behind which he was concealed so violently that it was a wonder that the lovers did not notice it.

"A time will soon come when we shall always be together," cried William Clayforth in a low tender voice, and a rich blush suffused her face, and she bent her eyes to the ground in maidenly confusion, for there was a passionate look in his eyes that always makes a modest woman afraid of her lover, however she may trust him.

"Where are you going?" she asked presently.

"To London, pet, on important business. I shall be away for a month—an eternity it seems to me, for I grudge every moment spent apart from you."

He kissed her again, and the watcher's brow grew darker and darker, until he appeared scarcely able to restrain his passion. He looked like a tiger about to spring, as he crouched down behind the hedge.

Maud had flirted with him in an innocent way before William came to put an end to the foolish pastime. She really did not know what harm she had done, and was quite alarmed when Jasper Gwynne reproached her bitterly for leading him on, when she meant nothing by it. She had not intended to hurt his feelings, she had unconsciously been playing with fire.

"You must go," she sighed, nestling closer to her lover with a tearful smile. "You will think I am foolish, I dare say, William, but I feel as if something will happen whilst you are absent from me."

"Nonsense!" he cried with all a man's contempt for such fancies. "What could happen? I would not leave you for so long a time if I could help it; but business, you know, must be attended to. You would not like me to lose my position with the firm, would you, just as I am getting on so well?"

"No, no," she answered quickly. "Go, dear William, by all means. I will not let such absurd ideas trouble me. I ought to know better. What sort of a wife should I make if I am influenced by such superstitions?"

"You will make the best of wives in the world," he returned with a tender caress. "Only I wish I had wealth for many reasons; one is that money would remove the only objection to my suit in your father's eyes. I should like to be able to woo you openly, Maud. It is not my fault," laughingly bitterly, "that we meet in this secret way."

"Papa is very harsh and cold," sighed Maud. "Your poverty and want of social position are defects in his eyes; but he has another reason for disliking you. It is he who called you a regular Don Juan. He says that you would make a bad husband."

"All of which goes in at one of my darling's pink ears and comes out of the other," cried William triumphantly. "No one could turn you against me, Maud?"

"Oh no," said Maud. "And you, William? Could anyone induce you to believe anything to my discredit?"

"How can you ask such a question, Maud?" he returned. "My faith in you is perfect."

The man behind the hedge smiled for the first time, and the smile lingered on his lips even whilst he watched.

When they had gone their separate ways, he came out of his hiding-place and began pacing to and fro, with one hand thrust in his breast, and his head a little bent.

"They will take him in as a partner when he comes back," he muttered. "I heard Carter say so when his back was turned. Perhaps, if he knew, Maud Waring's father would not be so hard on his youthful indiscretions. I have a clear month—only four weeks; but a great deal may happen in that space of time."

Jasper Gwynne laughed harshly as he uttered these words, and then he too hurried away, and the little dell was left to the sweet silence of nature.

Poor Maud! she little knew that her parting with her lover had been witnessed by the man whose offer of marriage she had rejected.

She had forgotten the very existence of Jasper Gwynne in her grief at parting from William, and never imagined that the words her rejected suitor had uttered were anything but empty threats wrung from him by disappointment.

The girl knew, now that she herself loved, how bitter disappointment must be, and felt sorry that her foolish vanity had led her to give him the slightest encouragement.

If I had my time to come over again, I would act differently," she often thought. But the mischief was done.

She stood at one of the windows that afternoon, her eyes turned thoughtfully towards the road, when she saw Gwynne pass. He went straight by without looking to the right or left, disappeared from view, and an instant later she heard the loud ringing of the hall-bell.

What could Mr Gwynne want with her father? she wondered. But her curiosity was not very great. William occupied her thoughts just then, to the exclusion of everything else.

His leaving her was compulsory, unless he wanted to lose his employment; but she did wish with all her heart that he had not been obliged to go.

The strange presentiment of evil which he had laughed at would not be shaken off, although she felt almost humiliated at such a condition of mind.

"What did Mr. Gwynne call here for?" she asked indifferently when she went down to dinner.

"A little matter of business—that was all, my dear," returned her father, unfolding his serviette as he spoke. "A nice young man that, with splendid prospects! I did wish once that you might have liked him; but that is at an end, of course, so we won't renew the subject. I am afraid it is so long since my own youth that I don't understand young people. However, it is not too late to remedy all that. We'll have a talk in the library after dinner. I have something very particular to say to you."

Maud gave her father a grateful glance, but the entrance of the servant prevented her from making a verbal answer. Her father's words had aroused her curiosity and caused a wild hope to spring up in her heart.

Did he mean to give way and consent to her marriage with William? Oh no, that could not be. It was too good to be true.

When dinner was over she dutifully followed her father into the library. To her surprise he did not speak, but sat down at the centre table and began sorting over the papers. His face was turned from her, and she could only see the bald patch at the top of his head; but she looked at that earnestly, wondering what he had to say.

"Maud."

"Yes, pa."

"You might have told me that you were in the habit of meeting Clayforth in secret. It is not pleasant to hear such things from a—from gossiping women whose tongues are always on the move. There, don't cry. You'll only make your eyes red, and you know how I hate tears. It was the way your mother got over me. I dare say I have been rather hard on you—on consideration I am sure I have."

"Oh, papa!"

"There, don't interrupt. I've been thinking over matters, and it seems to me that since you have made up your mind to have this young man, it is no use my setting my face against the marriage. So I have decided to withhold my objections. Why, girl, you will smother me! I don't want such exuberant thanks. It is quite enough"—here Mr. Waring seemed to be making a violent attempt to swallow something—"quite enough to know that you are satisfied. You may run away now, as I have got some letters to write."

Thus dismissed, Maud went to her own room with a light heart, overjoyed at the sudden removal of all obstacles from her path.

Her comfortable state of mind would have been greatly disturbed if she could have seen her father's face when he was left alone.

She sat down at her desk and wrote William a longe affectianate letter, full of her pleasant news, and then slipped downstairs and placed it on the hall table for Richard to post.

"Oh," said her father, opening the library door, "I'm going out for a stroll and a cigar, and will put your letter in the pillar if you like. Richard has gone down to the town for me, and won't be home till late."

"Thank you, papa," returned Maud gratefully. And she stood looking after him as he walked down the moonlit avenue with her precious note in his hand, thinking with a happy smile on her rosy lips how delighted William would be when he read the tender loving words.

She would get a letter from him on the following day, she told herself; but many days came and went without bringing what she longed for so ardently, and at last she left off asking for the missive that never came.

Weeks went by. Jasper Gwynne called one evening, and was surprised at the change in the girl he loved. She was not less beautiful—far from it; but her whole expression had changed. He watched her as she sat in the lamplight, her fingers toying with some woman's work, and gleaming like ivory against her black silk dress.

"Well," said Mr. Waring, "what is the latest news, Gwynne?"

"The latest news?" returned the other. "Well, I suppose it is the latest news—but perhaps you have heard it—about young Clayforth, you know."

Maud's busy hands fell on her lap. She turned her head to hide the sudden pallor that overspread her face.

"About young Clayforth?" queried Mr. Waring, shaking his head and glancing under his eyelids at his daughter.

"Oh, you have not heard it, then? I'm surprised at that. He sailed for Australia today in the Mary Pascal."

"Indeed!" said Maud's father, for Maud herself said nothing.

She put a few random stitches into her work, and as she did so a tear-drop fell upon it.

Oh, it was cruel—too cruel to leave her with loving words and kisses, and then forget her very existence, as he must have forgotten it, or surely he would have sent some word of farewell.

"It is a good thing for him," she heard Jasper say. "He had no friends to leave behind, and it is a capital opportunity, I am told."

No friends to leave behind! Ah! The girl gave a long shuddering sigh as she thought of the hopes she had so fondly cherished. He had never loved her, after all—perhaps had known, when he left her, that they would never meet again.

It was a terrible blow, but it did not kill her. She lived it down, as so many others have done, and if the bright joyousness of other days was replaced by a gentle gravity, it did not in any way detract from her charms.

Jasper was very patient, very humble, and three years later, as much to please her father as anything else, she consented to be his wife at some future time.

"Are you going to Mrs. Hales's garden-party?" he asked, as they walked in the garden one sunshiny morning.

"Yes; are you?"

"If you wish it, yes; but my brother John telegraphed for me yesterday to run up and see him."

So Maud went unattended, save by a married friend, to the garden-party, and enjoyed herself all the better for Jasper's absence—a bad augury for the future they were to spend together.

She had been playing lawn-tennis, and was resting under the welcome shade of a tree, when her hostess approached, followed by a gentleman.

"Miss Waring, allow me to introduce Mr. Clayforth," she said. "He has recently returned from Australia and knows nobody. I told him I had a lady friend who was just nature herself, and dragged him here sorely against his will. He is most horribly shy, or morose, or something—I'm sure I don't know what it is—and won't be amused."

Maud was as white as death, and trembled like a leaf. This meeting had brought the past back so vividly, with all its joys and sorrows. She wished with all her heart that she had stayed away from the garden-party.

"It is a splendid day," said Will in a constrained voice; indeed he could scarcely trust himself to speak.

"Very," returned Maud, staring after Mrs. Hales's retreating figure.

What right had he to adopt that tone? As if she had angered or offended him.

He spoke and looked as if he had some cause for resentment, whilst she, the real sufferer, could only try to hide her outraged feelings under an outward show of indifference. Her nature revolted against his heartlessness. How could he speak to her at all after what had been?

"This is the day of the year upon which I sailed for Australia," he observed. "I left England a poor man, to return rich beyond all my expectations."

"Indeed," said Maud, remembering how they had parted, and flushing deeply as she thought of "love's swift kisses, and sighs, and vows, and the clasp of clinging hands."

"Yes," he said, "I am a very wealthy man, Miss Waring; but money is not everything. I would give it all for my lost faith in all things human."

"Are you misanthropic?" asked Maud, a little sarcastically.

"Whose fault is it if I am?" he asked with sudden pain.

"Have you been jilted since our last meeting?" she asked, beginning to think there was such a thing as practical justice.

"You seem to delight in jeering at me," he cried. "Is it not hard enough to see you with Gwynne's ring on your finger? Have you no heart?"

"You broke it long ago," she murmured in a tremulous whisper.

"I?" and he laughed bitterly. "That is the reason I suppose that you left all my letters unanswered, and that you consented to be Gwynne's wife a fortnight after I left? The mystery to me is that you are not married. Three years is a long time for a man so much in love."

Maud's face was no longer pale, but flushed with indignation. She rose and faced William, her eyes shining with a light that startled him.

"And you believed him?" said the girl slowly.

"Of course I believed him," he returned; "and is not that ring on your finger proof positive of the truth?"

"No," answered Maud, stretching out her hand. "I was not engaged to Jasper Gwynne until three years after you left. I never had your letters."

She was in his arms now. Her head rested on his shoulder. In that hour of happiness he felt almost compensated for the past.

"Who was to blame?" he asked.

But to that Maud made no reply.

Her father and Jasper had made the mischief between them.

For Maud's sake William forgave Mr. Waring's share in the plot which had sent him off to Australia, and as for Jasper, his punishment was to know that he had been found out.

Maud and William were very happy—all the happier, perhaps, because of the three years' separation they had endured.

After all, as William told his wife, the visit to Australia was the very best thing that could have happened now that it was over.

And so it is with most of the trials of this life. More often than not they turn out to be nothing but blessings in disguise.

THE END.

The First President of the Texan Republic.

About two years after the revolution General Houston had his first difficulty with the people. Under the Constitution the capital had been fixed at Austin, but power was given to the President to order the temporary removal of the archives in case of danger. The Comanches were committing ravages within sight of Austin, and General Houston ordered the State records to be forwarded to him at Washington (Texas). This caused much excitement in Austin, and four hundred men placed themselves about the State-house to prevent the removal. Colonel Morton, a leading spirit of the revolution, was at their head, and wrote to General Houston, who well knew his character as a fighting man, that, if the archives were removed, he (Morton) would hunt him down like a wolf. General Houston replied in a note of characteristic brevity: "If the people of Austin do not send them, I shall come and get them, and if Colonel Morton can kill me, he is welcome to my ear-lap." The guard was at once doubled, patrolmen were placed on the roads, and a select committee went into permanent session in the city hall. During a sitting of that body one who was unannounced suddenly stood in their midst, having gained entrance by means of a tall live-oak which grew against the window; his garb and arms were those of a hunter, and, being spoken to by Colonel Morton, he placed his finger on his lips and remained silent. Colonel Morton flew into a rage and seized him, when the stranger drew his bowie-knife at the same instant that Morton's friends held him back. Another member of the body spoke to the stranger, saying, that the meeting was a private one, and that he presumed the gentleman had mistaken the house. At this he walked to a table and wrote one line, "I am deaf." Judge Webb then wrote, "Tell us your business," when a letter was handed him addressed to the citizens of Austin, which the judge read aloud as follows: "Fellow-citizens: Though in error, and deceived by the art of traitors, I will give you three days more to decide whether or not you will forward to me the archives. At the end of that time you will please let me know your decision. Sam Houston." The deaf man waited a few moments for a reply, and was about to leave, when Colonel Morton handed him a note saying, "You were brave enough to insult me; are you brave enough to give me satisfaction?" The mute wrote, "I am at your service," and after fixing terms he left by the window. Morton was told he would be killed, as he was to fight Deaf Smith, who never missed his man; but he could not be shaken in his resolve. The weapons used were rifles, the distance was a hundred paces, and the time sunset. A vast crowd saw the duel. Morton was dressed in broadcloth, his antagonist in smoke-tinted buckskin. Both were cool and stern. At the given signal both fired at the same instant; Morton sprang into the air and fell dead, a ball in his heart. Deaf Smith quietly reloaded his rifle and walked into the forest. Three days afterward he came with General Houston and ten others to Austin, and the archives were removed without further opposition.

While President of the republic, Houston received a challenge to fight a duel, sent by a man whom he regarded as greatly his inferior socially. Turning to the bearer of the challenge, he exclaimed, in a low voice full of indignant scorn, "Sir, tell your principal that Sam Houston never fights down hill."

It was his habit to deliver his messages to the Texan Congress orally. A few days before one of his inaugurals, a member of Congress said to the President that the body would be better pleased if he would prepare written messages; that it would be treating them more respectfully to write them out, and, besides, they could then be preserved for future reference. Accordingly, on the day fixed for the inauguration, he appeared with a large roll of paper in his hand tied with a blue ribbon, and marked in large letters "Inaugural." He addressed them with the roll in his hand, waving it gracefully that all might see it, and, concluding with a polite bow handed it to the clerk and walked out of the chamber; when opened it proved to be only blank paper!—From an article on "General Sam Houston," by Alexander Hynds, in the August Century.

One of the phrases given to the world by the new and entertaining Cincinnati Sun is "knowledgeous information.

THE NEVADA FOOTPRINTS.

Were They Made by Human Beings.

The following are the main points of Dr. D. W. Harkness' paper on the Nevada footprints, read before the San Francisco Academy of Sciences:

"While some express the belief that the tracks are those of a quadruped—Professor Marsh, even before so august a body as the National Academy, ventures to give a name to the animal who made them—there are others, including the writer, who are equally sanguine in the belief that the footprints in dispute are of bipedal origin. The question is gradually being brought within narrower limits, and it is likely that in the future the principal point of discussion will be whether the tracks are those of a quadruped or those of a man, as it would appear that if it were once satisfactorily determined that they are surely the imprints of a biped, it will prove but an easy task to show conclusively that they were made by the progenitors of the human race.

"I am fully aware that there are likely to be many delicate points which must yet be adjusted before the scientist will give full credence to

SO MOMENTOUS A CONCLUSION.

It is of importance that the exact geological period should be determined, so that other remains of man of that period—if any such should exist—such as flints or other implements, may be grouped together, and their relations, the one with the other, definitely determined. When this work shall have been completed we may be sure that the Nevada man will take the position to which he is entitled.

"All animals which walk upon the earth's surface are provided with certain pads, or cushions, which serve the double purpose of protecting the foot while in contact with the earth, and also by their elasticity facilitating motion. These pads or cushions vary greatly in form and density in the different animals, so as to meet the requirements of the individual to which they may belong; so that these pads may often serve as important aids in the determination of species. If, by way of illustration, we examine the foot of the ordinary barnyard fowl, it will be seen that the bones are protected by these pads; and this is especially the case where any articulation is in the least exposed to pressure. Among the higher animals we find essentially the same conditions existing; in some instances the condition is modified (as in the frog of the horse) so as to meet its requirements.

"I now call your attention to far the most important prints to be found in that locality, viz., the tracks made, as the writer believes, Homo Navadensis. These are about four hundred in number and belong to seven or eight distinct series, made apparently by as many different individuals. In length the prints are with a breadth of eight. The length of step is from three feet two to three feet three inches. The width of trackway (straddle) is eighteen inches, while the step is no longer than that of a man of the average stature. Here, it must be admitted, the trackway is of abnormal width. Of this, however, I shall speak presently.

"As stated in my previous paper, in outline these impressions follow closely the shape of the human foot. From the toe outward the line is gradually drawn in toward the heel, while from the toe inward there is a graceful curve to the instep, and thence in an outward direction to the heel. In one series of tracks this curve is much sharper than in any of the others. After repeated and careful observation, I have failed to discover in any one of the 400 tracks the slightest indication of the imprint of pad or toe, of instep, of claw, or of heel. The absence of such marks becomes the more significant when we take into consideration the fact that they are surrounded and actually crossed by tracks of other animals, which are so easily identified by their tracks alone.

"In each one of the footprints we find evidences, as I believe, that the foot had been protected by some artificial means; in some cases this was made of wood, as it would seem, or some other material equally unyielding, as the imprint is that of a plane. In one or two of the series a depression along the central line of the track would indicate that in this case the individual had used a material more yielding than wood, such as the dried skin of an animal, which, becoming moistened, was bent upward at the sides.

THE SANDAL WAS EIGHT INCHES IN WIDTH.

We can easily imagine that the use of such unwieldy foot-gear, especially when walking in muddy ground, would serve to account for the great width of trackway.

"Briefly reviewing the subject, there are many reasons which have led me to the conclusion that these imprints are not of quadrupedal origin. Among the most important of the objections are: First—The entire absence of such distinctive marks as would indicate an unprotected foot. Secondly—There are no indications of a misstep, either by accident or at points where the animal has deviated from the straight line. Professor Marsh's statement that he is assured that a double trackway has been found is certainly news to those who—like myself—have personally examined the tracks as they now appear upon the floor of the quarry. Third—The curve of the foot is so regular and so constant as to show that in every instance the hind foot—if of a quadruped—was at all times placed exactly upon the spot previously occupied by the forward foot, or that both the forward and the hind feet were of exactly the same form—conditions which, to say the least, are extremely improbable. Fourth—We find, as before stated, that in one or two of the series the central portion of the impression in the line of its long diameter is somewhat more depressed than at the border, which is doubtless owing to having, when moistened by contact with the mud, yielded slightly to the pressure. This, as an isolated fact, becomes of great import, as it would indicate that if the tracks were of a quadruped they were surely made by animals of different species. And finally, upon carefully studying the impressions upon the ground, we find that the angle of the foot varies in several series, in some the curve being much sharper than in others; and while this fact may be easily accounted for on the supposition that the form of the foot-gear varied according to the taste or the caprice of the wearer, yet it will doubtless prove to be a work of considerable difficulty to make this fact harmonize with the quadrupedal theory."

Living Cameos and Bas-Reliefs.

This fascinating entertainment can be prepared by children, at short notice, with very little trouble or expense. The articles required are two sheets of large card-board, two sheets of white cotton wadding, one ball of white and one of pink velvet chalk, a lead pencil, a pair of scissors, six yards of black cambric, a few tacks, and a little paste.

One sheet of card-board is fastened on the side wall of a darkened room, so that the shadow of the face of a person with large and regular features will fall upon the center of it when a lighted candle is held in front of the side of the face at a distance of three feet. A cup should be placed between the face and the card-board and kept in position by the pressure of the head, in order, so far as possible, to prevent any moment on the part of the sitter. The candle must be so placed that the shadow of profile is in the center of the card-board; the outlines are then to be traced with a pencil. The card-board can then be taken down and the profile carefully cut out; the back of the head usually being enlarged, so that various methods of dressing the hair may be permitted. The white card-board will be ready for the bas-relief after the outer edge has been cut into the form of a circle, and made thicker by several rings of pasteboard of the same diameter, but only three inches wide. When cameos are to be exhibited, the outer surface should be covered with pink tissue-paper.

A curtain of cheap black cambric or any plain-colored material, reaching from the ceiling to the floor, is then hung at a distance of about two feet from the back wall of the room where the exhibition is to take place. The card-board is fastened into a hole made in the curtain, so that the center of opening is about six or seven feet from the floor, and a chair or small table is placed close behind this curtain and another small piece of black cloth is tacked to the wall behind the opening.

The person whose face is to form the bas-relief stands upon a chair or table so that the head fits into the opening in the card-board, about one-half of it projecting in front of the surface of the frame thus formed. The side-face thus exposed is chalked and the hair is covered with white wadding, which conceals it, and also can be fastened in waves, plaits, or classic knots; for cameos, pink chalk, and tissue-paper take the place of the white. Very pretty art studies can thus be made by inexperienced persons.

When it is desired to show several of these art studies consecutively, it will be well to have a pink and a white frame placed side by side about one foot apart, as then they may be shown together or separately; the one not in use being covered with a little curtain of black cambric. Thus a pleasing variety can be produced by showing either a cameo or a bas-relief or both together. Faces of children or of people can be used as desired, as it is not absolutely necessary that the features should exactly fill the cut profiles in the card-board. The eyes are always closed, and a little chalk should be rubbed on the eyelids just before the face is shown to the spectators.

The frames may be placed between thick window-curtains draped above and below them; this will save the trouble of a black curtain, as the performers can stand in the window behind the curtain. The best manner of lighting them is from the top; and when the room has no chandelier, a lamp can be held as the left side as high as can be done conveniently by a person who stands upon a chair or short step-ladder.—George B. Bartlett, in St. Nicholas for September.

The Cost of Sickness.

I think, then, that we can not escape from the reasons to believe that we lose in England and Wales, every year, in consequence of sickness, 20,000,000 weeks' work; or, say, as much work as 20,000,000 healthy people would do in a week.

The number is not easily grasped by the mind. It is equal to about one-fortieth part of the work done in each year by the whole population between 15 and 65 years old. Or, try to think of it in money. Rather more than half of it is lost by those whom the registrar-general names the domestic, the agricultural, and the industrial classes. There are more than 7,500,000 in number, and they lose about 11,000,000 weeks; say, for easy reckoning, at £1 a week; and here is a loss of £11,000,000 sterling from what should be the annual wealth of the country. For the other classes, who are estimated as losing the other 9,000,000 weeks' work, it would be hard and unfair to make a guess in any known coin; for these include our great merchants, our judges and lawyers, and medical men, our statesmen, and chief legislators; they include our poets and writers of all kinds, musicians, painters, and philosophers; and our princes, who certainly do more for the wealth and welfare of the country than can be told in money.—Sir James Paget, in Popular Science Monthly.

A Novel Marketing.

A party of Philadelphians who recently returned from a trip to Canada tell a quaint story illustrating the extreme thrift and simple habits of the old French inhabitants of Canada. While they were in Quebec they arose at 4 in the morning to visit the French market, one of the sights of Quebec. Driving ahead of their carriage they noticed an old French peasant on his way to market. He was in a little low cart, with a seat about eighteen inches wide, drawn by a large shepherd dog. When they reached the market one of the Philadelphians purchased the man's entire stock, an enormous five cent string of onions and a dozen bunches of radishes for five cents. The day's marketing was over for the old Frenchman, and he whipped up his dog for the return trip. He had traveled eight miles from Beaufort, near Quebec, and paid four cents toll to sell ten cents worth of vegetables. When the wear and tear of dog and man was deducted from the six cents, the profit must have been a small one indeed.—Philadelphia Press.

Charles Wyndham was telling me recently how he was interviewed in America. The energetic reporter caught him just as he was changing between the acts. "I want to interview you," he said. "I haven't a minute to spare," replied the actor, hurriedly, "this is one of my quickest changes." "You have been very successful," continued the interviewer. "I am glad to hear it," replied Wyndham. "May I call on you to-morrow?" "Unfortunately I am off early in the morning, so I fear I cannot give myself the pleasure of seeing you." "Good evening, then." "Good night." This conversation the next morning occupied a column and a half.

500 STEM-WINDING WATCHES FREE.

THE POULTRY KEEPER is well established, having already 60,000 subscribers, and is backed by ample capital, so that every one of our subscribers may be sure of getting what we promise. Indeed we could establish a circulation of 100,000 copies, if we would think an offer to give away $50,000 in presents in most unreasonable and unprofitable; but let us say to all such persons that it costs anywhere from $35.00 to $150, $60 to secure a large circulation to a paper. We know of a publisher that spent $50,000 in one month in giving away free organs and advertising his papers, and the money was well spent, for it secured for him an established circulation that paid good interest on the investment. Publishing nowadays must either be done on an extensive scale or not at all. It costs just as much for matter, and just as much for illustrations, electrotypes, editorial services, rent, and for setting up the type for a paper of 100 circulation as it does for a paper with 100,000 circulation. On small editions such sum of the above items swells the cost of a single paper alarmingly, but on large editions the expense is spread over so many papers that it is almost entirely lost. Those persons that have profits can be made only by having a large business. This is precisely what we propose doing with THE POULTRY KEEPER. We will send a Printed List of the awards free and all presents will be forwarded to holders of receipts as they may direct. OUR OLD PATRONS AND SUBSCRIBERS, whom we number by thousands, should go to work at once and help us to increase our list by this grand and generous offer.

ONLY 50 CENTS Before THE POULTRY KEEPER one year and one receipt good for one present. One number of the paper is worth double the subscription price. As to our reliability, we refer those who do not know us to any Bank or Mercantile Agency.

REMEMBER these are Presents to our Subscribers given to them absolutely Free. (2-Cent Postage Stamps taken.)

1 Money in sums of $1 or less may be sent to us in ordinary letter at our risk; larger sums should be sent by Registered Letter or Postal Note, and addressed to THE POULTRY KEEPER, 80 Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.

AYER'S
Cherry Pectoral.

No other complaints are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs: none so trifled with by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured.

"In 1878 I took a severe cold, which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded me the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continued use of the PECTORAL a permanent cure was effected. I am now 62 years old, hale and hearty, and am satisfied your CHERRY PECTORAL saved me.
HORACE FAIRBROTHER."

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.

"While in the country last winter my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with croup; it seemed as if he would die from strangulation. One of the family suggested the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was tried in small and frequent doses, and to our delight in less than half an hour the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the CHERRY PECTORAL had saved my darling's life. Can you wonder at our gratitude? Sincerely yours,
MRS. EMMA GEDNEY."
159 West 126th St., New York, May 16, 1882.

"I have used AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL in my family for several years, and do not hesitate to pronounce it the most effectual remedy for coughs and colds we have ever tried. A. J. CRANE."
Lake Crystal, Minn., March 15, 1882.

"I suffered for eight years from Bronchitis, and after trying many remedies with no success, I was cured by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. JOSEPH WALDEN."
Byhalia, Miss., April 5, 1882.

"I cannot say enough in praise of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, believing as I do that but for its use I should long since have died from lung trouble. E. BRAGDON."
Palestine, Texas, April 22, 1882.

No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and it will always cure when the disease is not already beyond the control of medicine.

THE RED FLAG.

BY

M. E. BRADDON.

Author of "Lady Audley's Secret," etc. etc. etc.

Next morning there was a bunch of daffodils on the little table, a bunch of yellow bloom lighting up the shadowy corner. Suzon had trudged to the flower-market before she opened her shop, to buy these spring flowers for the man she loved. Yes, she loved him, and meant to marry him if she could. He was a gentleman, and she canaille de canaille. But what of that? Did not the gutter throne it yonder on the side of th Seine, in the Bois, in the Parc Monceau—the gutter made glorious in silks and satins, driving thoroughbred horses, scattering their lovers' substance in waves of gold? Did not all that was noblest in the land lay itself down and grovel at the feet of the gutter? And her gentleman was poor and friendless; he lived in a garret, and toiled for a pittance. Surely he would be willing and glad to marry her, when he knew that she had saved money, and had her little investments in the public funds.

He smiled at sight of the first flowers of spring, looking up at the widow, saw that she was smiling too. All her sullen gloom had melted at sight of him. She was so glad he had not forsaken her shop. Perhaps it would have hurt her even more than his desertion to have known how insignificant a figure she made in his life, and how little he had thought about yesterday's dispute.

He asked her the news, and her whole face beamed at the sound of his voice. She prattled away gaily for the rest of the hour, and considered every other customer an intruder while Gaston sat at his little table.

"You ought to put up a placard in your window, with "Relache" upon it, when Monsieur is here," said a grumpy porter, to whom she had served a pat of butter with scant civility and whose keen eyes saw the state of affairs.

This kind of thing went on for more than a year. Now and again, when Gaston was in luck and had made a few francs more than his ordinary earnings from the newspapers, he rewarded the little widow's attentions by taking her to a theatre, and giving her an ice or a supper in the Passage Jouffroy before he escorted her home. He treated her en grand seigneur on these occasions, and these evenings were to Suzon Michel as nights spent in paradise; hours to dream about for weeks after they were gone, to long for with a passionate longing. Yet they brought her no nearer to the man she loved or to the realisation of her hopes. Not a word was ever spoken of love or marriage. When they parted on the steps of the cremerie, while the bells of Notre Dame were chiming one of the quarters after midnight, they were as far apart as ever. If she was ever to be Madame Mortemar the offer of marriage must come from her own lips, Suzon thought; and she would not have shrunk from telling the man of her choice of those snug little investments, and her willingness to share her economies with him. Feminine delicacy would not have hindered such an avowal; but there was something in the man himself which sealed her lips.

Gaston was as cold as ice, as calm as marble. He had that amiable languor of speech and manner which clever young men are apt to affect, until it becomes a second nature. He talked like a man who had lived through every experience that life could offer to reprobate youth, who had grown old in evil before Time had written a wrinkle on his brow.

"Ah, but he has lived, that youth!" said the knowing ones of the quarter. "He has squandered the paternal fortune on actresses and cocottes, and now he has to write for his bread."

The fact was that Gaston Mortemar had never had a napoleon to bestow upon anybody, for good or evil. He had worked for his daily bread ever since he left the school of Albert the Great, where he had been one of the brightest pupils of the good Dominicans. He had never been rich enough to be prodigate in a grand way; and he was too proud, too refined to stoop to cheap vice. He was, like Alfred de Musset, a dandy born, created with refined tastes and lofty aspirations; but poverty had embittered him. He had fed his mind with the writings of Vilion and Voltaire and Rousseau, Theophile Gautier, Musset, Baudelaire, and Flaubert. He was a cynic to the marrow of his bones. He tried to surpass Voltaire in acrimony, Rousseau in discontent, and lashed himself into fury when he wrote about the great ones of the earth.

One day he met Kathleen O'Hara in the morning sunshine, coming in from her marketing, just as he was going out to breakfast, with a neat gray gown and a pale-blue neck-ribbon, and a basket of lettuce and redishes on her arm; and he thought he saw a Greuze that had suddenly become flesh and blood, and had walked out of its frame in the Louvre yonder, across the shining river. He forgot his good manners, and turned to look after her as she crossed the yard and tripped up the steps of that house which he had just left. He knew that two girls occupied one half of the third story, but they had kept themselves so close that he had only seen the elder sister, once in a way, on the staircase. Madame Schubert was standing in her doorway, scenting the morning air, and watching the goings and comings of her neighbors. She and Gaston had long been on friendly terms, so she gave him a little nod, and laughed as he passed her door.

"Gentille, n'est-ce pas, mon garcon?" she screamed, in her shrill treble, with the Boulevard St. Michel twang.

"Gentille! She is adorable," answered Gaston. "Is it possible that such an angel inhabits the same dull walls that shelter me?"

"Dangerous, is it not? But she is as good as she is pretty. A gentleman's daughter too, though she and her sister have to work for their bread, poor orphans. The father was an Irish captain."

"Irish!" exclaimed Gaston, with a touch of surprise.

He had a vague idea that Irish men and women were a kind of savages who inhabited a barren island on the wild Atlantic, and ran about half-naked among the rocks.

"Yes, but these girls have never been in Ireland. They were educated in a convent near Bruges. They are young ladies, pious, well-conducted, although they work for their daily bread. Durand, my neighbor, the young cabinet-maker, is over head and ears in love with the elder sister, and I think there will be a marriage before long."

"Durand! What, the sturdy broad-shouldered youth at No. 7, who whistles and sings so loud as he goes in and out?"

"Yes; a fine frank nature."

"Noisy enough, in all conscience," said Gaston; and he went on to get his breakfast.

He was in no humor for conversation this morning, and Suzon Michel's prattle bored him. He read, or seemed to be reading, the Figaro while she was talking—a rudeness which galled the widow.

"Do you know those two young ladies in the Rue Git le Cœur, the house I live in?" he asked presently, without looking up from his paper.

"Young ladies!" echoed Suzon contemptuously. "A gentleman may live in the Rue Git le Cœur, a gentleman may live anywhere, that is understood; but young ladies—that is too much! I know two girls who work for the artificial flower-maker on the Boulevard St. Germain."

"They are ladies by birth and education, I am told."

"They are stuck-up minxes; and although that young one has come to my shop every day for the last six years she does not think me worthy of five minutes' conversation; a lady, sir, as she always calls herself, and she's out of my shop as if she thought the place polluted her."

"She is shy, perhaps," said Gaston. "I should not think she could be proud."

Suzon looked at him sharply with those flashing eyes of hers—fine eyes, full, black, luminous, but not altogether beautiful.

"What does monsieur know of this young person that he is so ready to answer for her?" she asked, with a mocking air.

"Very little. I passed her in the street just now. I doubt if I ever saw her till that moment, though we live in the same house. Some faces can be read at a glance. In hers I saw purity, sweetness, truth, simplicity."

"My faith! You are skilful at reading faces," retorted Madame Michel; "but it is easy to see virtues of that kind on a pretty woman. Had Ma'mselle Hara been ugly you would not have discovered half these qualities in her face."

"They might have been there, perhaps; but I own I should not have looked so keenly. She is the image of a Greuze in the Louvre. You know the picture in the Louvre?"

"Not much," said Suzon, with a careless shrug.

"Why, you go there nearly every Sunday afternoon."

"True; but I go to look at the people, not the pictures."

Gaston paid for his breakfast, and strolled on to his newspaper-office, thinking that Suzon grew more vulgar every day. He was vexed with himself for having allowed her to establish a kind of friendship with him. She! the keeper of a milk shop!

"And to think that I come from one of the best families in Brittany," he said to himself. "Well, I have thrown my lot in with the people. I have made myself their advocate; I have asserted the equal rights of man. Ought I to feel offended if a milk woman treats me as her friend? A handsome woman, too; bright, agreeable, not without intelligence, and full of strong feeling. Poor little Suzon!"

Poor little Suzon! Gaston began to lessen his visits to the cremerie. He took a cup of coffee in the garret, and went straight to his day's work. He was too busy to breakfast in the old leisurely manner, he told Madame Michel, when she reproached him with this falling off from the old ways.

"Have I done anything to offend you?" she asked, looking at him with eyes which took a new beauty, softened by sadness.

"Offend me, dear Madame Michel! But assuredly not. You are all that is good. But I am working hard just now. It does not do for a man to saunter through life, to be always a trifler. I have a good deal to do for the paper; and I spend an hour or two every day at the Imperial Library."

"If you are getting a learned man I shall see no more of you," sighed the widow. "You will not be able to endure my ignorant chatter."

"Gaiety of heart is delightful at all times," said Gaston.

And then they parted, with ceremonious politeness on his side, with keen scrutiny and suspicion on hers.

Monsieur was not writing verses, but he was living a poem. Maman Schubert, the good-natured busybody of the Rue Git le Cœur, had planned a little tea-party—un the a l'Anglaise—and had invited the two O'Hara girls—known in their little circle as the Demoiselles Hara, since the O was too much for a Parisian mouth—and Philip Durand, the cabinet-maker, an honest young fellow, a thorough workman and artist, in a very artistic trade, and a prominent member of the work men's syndicate; and the cabinet-makers' syndicate ranks high among the societies of French workmen. So far the party consisted of old friends, since good Madame Schubert had been almost as a mother to the girls whom she had seen arrive in the Rue Git le Cœur, dusty and bewildered-looking, on the evening of their entry into Paris, and Philip had been Rose's devoted lover for the last three years, haunting her like her shadow as she went to and from her work, in the early mornings when Paris was being swept and garnished, in the dusky evenings when its million lamps were being lighted. Never was there a more unselfish, a more patient wooer. Rose had been hard with him; Rose had kept him at arm's length. She never meant to marry. She had her mission in life; and that mission was to take care of Kathleen.

"Will you be less able to guard her when you have a strong man to help you?" asked Philip. "Do you suppose I shall grudge her a room in our lodgings, a place at our table? She will be my sister as much as yours, and as dear to me as to you."

"That cannot be. She is more than a sister to me. She is the one love and care of my life. Work would lose all its sweetness if I did not know I was working for her as well as for myself. I am sure you are good and generous. I daresay you would be kind to her; but you might grow weary of her; bad times might come, and you might think her a burden. I will run no risks. I should feel as if I were giving her a stepfather."

"And have you made up your mind never to marry?"

"Never, while Kathleen is single. If she were well married it might be different."

"Then it shall be my business to find her a good husband," said Philip. "With such a pretty girl there can be no difficulty."

But Philip Durand was a poor hand at match-making. While he was thinking about the business, and wondering which of the men he rubbed shoulders with at the workmen's chamber was worthy to mate with Rose O'Hara's sister, Madame Schubert, who was an incorrigible schemer in the matrimonial line, had brought Kathleen face to face with the man whom Fate meant for her husband.

The fourth guest and only stranger at Madame Schubert's English tea was Gaston Mortemar; and that evening completed Kathleen's conquest. He was her adorer and her slave from that hour. It seemed to him as if all life took new colors after that evening. The leopard cannot change his spots all at once; but the leopard's ways and manners may be considerably influenced; and although Gaston was still Voltairian in his way of thinking, still a leveler in politics, he worked more earnestly and more honestly than he had ever done before; for he had assumed the responsibility of winning a bright future for Kathleen O'Hara.

The wooing and winning were easily done, for the girl's young heart went out to him as Gretchen's to Faust. A little walk on the bridge in the summer twilight, a flower or two—bought in the flower-market, but cherished as if it were a blossom of supernal growth—a chance meeting in the sunny morning, when Kathleen was marketing, and these two were pledged to each other for life. But Rose was terribly wise. She seemed the very spirit of worldliness, and she refused her consent to an imprudent marriage. When Gaston had saved a little money, and could earn, say, three napoleons a week—which was less than the skilled cabinet-maker earned—Kathleen should be his wife; not sooner. Gaston was earning on an average two napoleons weekly, and there was not much margin for saving out of that.

Hitherto he had found himself just able to live, clothe himself like a gentleman, and keep out of debt. And to do even this he had been thrifty and self-denying. But what will not love do? He became as sparing as Pere Grandet: except when he wanted to offer a little pleasure, a theatre or a cafe chantant, to the sisters.

Such offers were but rarely accepted. Rose watched Kathleen like a lynx, and allowed few tete-a-tetes between the lovers. Never was girlish simplicity guarded more closely from all peril of pollution. But, once in a way, this severe damsel relented so far as to allow the two lovers to organise an evening's dissipation; and it was on one of these occasions, almost immediately after Kathleen's engagement, that Suzon Michel saw Gaston and his sweetheart together for the first time.

It was a sultry August evening, the Seine shining in the golden light of the western sky, the air already thick with the dust. Double fare Gaston had bought tickets for the side-boxes at the Ambigu, where a new play, by Dumas the younger, was being acted, to the delight of all Paris—or, at least, that inferior and second-rate Paris which had not migrated to fashionable watering-places and mountain springs. Kathleen and Gaston walked arm-in-arm along the quay, so engrossed in each other as to be quite unconscious of passers-by. Faces came and went beside them, voices sounded; but it was all dim as the sounds and faces in a dream. They lived, they saw, they heard, they breathed only for each other.

Close behind them came Rose and her faithful swain; and Rose, even in her tenderest moments, was mindful of her sister. She was fond and proud of her stalwart, good-looking workman-lover, who was so fine a specimen of his rank and race, so much a gentleman by nature as Gaston Mortemar was a gentleman by hereditary instinct; but she was not lifted off this dull earth by her love.

As they walked towards the Pont Neuf, with their faces to the west and the sun shining on them, Suzon Michel met them. She saw them ever so far off; the tall slight figure of the man, whose look and bearing she knew so well; the golden-haired girl at his side, radiant and lovely in her plain alpaca gown, and neat little black lace bonnet, with clusters of violets nestling between the lace and her sunny hair—those violets which the auburn-haired Empress loved so well.

Suzon slackened her pace as they drew near her. He would recognise her, of course—the false-hearted one; and speak her fair, albeit he had broken her heart by his coldness and ingratitude. He would stop, the audacious one, and brazen out his treachery, and make light of his heartlessness.

But Gaston walked on without seeing her. He passed her by, unconscious of her presence, his eyes bent with impassioned love upon the pure pale face beside him, his lips breathing softest words. Suzon drew aside, and stood upon the pavement, looking after them with diabolical hate in her face. Rose saw that look, and clutched Philip Durand's arm.

"Did you see that woman looking after my sister—the woman at the cremerie?" she asked.

But Philip had been too much absorbed in his betrothed to have eyes for the divers expressions of the passers by. He was full of gladness, thankfulness for his lot. He had been eminently successful as a craftsman, had won a medal for a piece of fine workmanship in the Exhibition of '75; he was looked upon as a leading light in the syndicate, and the dearest woman in the world had promised to be his wife. Now that Kathleen was engaged there was no more difficulty. So soon as Gaston was in a fair way to maintain a wife, the two couples would be united.

The evening at the Ambigu was enchantment; but both girls refused the luxury of ices at Tortoni's. How were lovers to be thrifty if their betrothed were ready to accept costly attentions? Besides, as they passed the famous confectioner's, Rose caught sight of a couple of carriages setting down some ladies and their cavaliers at a side door, and those painted faces and rustling silks belonged to a world from which Rose O'Hara recoiled as from a pestilence. So they all walked home in the August moonlight, talking of the play, and were safe in the Rue Git le Cœur before midnight.

Rose did not forget that look of Madame Michel's. Her intense affection for Kathleen made her suspicious of Kathleen's lover. Such a look as that in a young woman's face could but have one meaning. It meant jealousy; and there could hardly be jealousy without cause. The look suggested a history, and Rose set herself to find out that history. She consulted Madame Schubert, the one friend whom she could trust in so delicate a matter, and the good Schubert was not long in enlightening her. One does not live in such a place as the Rue Git le Cœur for five-and-twenty years without knowing a good deal about one's neighbors.

"Yes, my dear, there is no doubt this dear Mortemar had once a tenderness for the Michel. He used to breakfast at her shop every morning—a leisurely breakfast, during which those two talked—ah, great Heaven, how they talked! one could hardly get properly served while he was there. And he danced with her in the winter at the Bullier balls, and he used to take her to the theatre. Friends of mine saw them there, as happy as turtle-doves. But what of that? A man must sow his wild oats; and Gaston is not the less fond of your sister because he has played fast and loose with the Michel."

"My sister shall not marry a man who has played fast and loose with any woman," said Rose.

"That is rank nonsense," answered Maman Schubert. "Mark my words, Rose; if you try to part those two, you will break Kathleen's heart."

"Better her heart should be broken than by a bad husband," said Rose.

"He will not make a bad husband. Do you think a man is any the worse for a flirtation or two in his bachelor days? That is the way he learns the meaning of real love."

Rose was not easily appeased. She saw Gaston next day, and taxed him with his dishonorable conduct to the widow. He was indignant at the charge, and declared that there had never been anything serious between them. She had been attentive to him as a customer at her cremerie; he had been civil to her—that was all. The visits to the theatre meant no more than civility.

"There was something more than civility on her part, and I think you must have known it," answered Rose, intensely in earnest. "If you knew it and fooled her, you are not a good true man; and you shall not marry my sister."

Gaston protested against this absurd decree; but finally admitted that he had been to blame. Yes, perhaps he had known that Madame Michel was just a little taken with him, inclined to like his society, and to be jealous and angry when he deserted her shop. The shop was convenient; the woman was handsome and amusing. Why should not a man who was heart-whole, who had not one real woman-friend in the world talk and laugh with a pretty shopkeeper? It could do no harm.

"It has done harm. I saw as much in Madame Michel's face the other evening." And then she told Gaston the story of that encounter on the quay.

"Mademoiselle Rose, you exagrerate the situation. The Michel has a spice of the devil in her, and can give black looks on very slight provocation. For the rest, she and I have seen the last of each other. I have never crossed the threshold since I was betrothed to Kathleen; I never shall cross it again."

"Promise me that," said Rose.

"I promise, from my heart."

This happened in the year '69; and now it was midsummer in the fateful year '70, and France was treading daily, step by step, nearer the edge of the abyss.

CHAPTER IV.

THE SONG OF VICTORY.

It was at the beginning of August, just after the victory of Sarrebruck, and while Paris was stirred and thrilled with dreams of conquest, and all a-flutter with warlike feeling, that the two sisters were married in the cathedral of Notre Dame, on a sunshiny Saturday morning.

There was no finery at this wedding, no train of friends. Madame Schubert; a young journalist and playwright who wrote for Mortemar's paper; a middle-aged gray-bearded artist, who had painted plaques for some of Durand's cabinet-work—these were the only guests. The little procession walked across the bridge in the morning sunlight, the sisters dressed alike in gray cashmere, with white bonnets, and each wearing a cluster of white roses at her throat. Nothing could be simpler or less costly than this wedding toilet, yet both brides were charming; neatness, purity, modest contentment in their bearing and costume.

The ceremony was to be at ten. They were a quarter of an hour too soon; and Philip Durand, who loved the grand old pile with the artist's ardent love of fine artistic work, walked in the shadowy aisles with his painter friend, and expatiated upon the beauties of the building, while Rose walked up his side, proud of her lover's learning and enthusiasm.

Kathleen and Gaston waited near the altar, the girl kneeling with bent head and hidden face, deep in prayer; the lover sitting near, dreamily watching the graceful figure in soft gray drapery, touched with glintings of colored light from the old stained windows.

There were no other weddings at that particular hour on that particular morning. These two couples and their friends and the mighty fane all to themselves. As the clock struck ten the organ began to peal, and the priests came slowly towards the altar in their rich vestments—for the vestments worn upon the humblest occasions at Notre Dame are splendid—and the ceremonial began.

All was over in less than half an hour, and Kathleen and her sister went back into the sunshine, out of the gray shadows, the magical lights from painted glass, the glory of gold, and splendor of chromatic color.

"Is that all?" asked Kathleen, looking up at her lover-husband. "Am I really and truly your wife?"

"Really and truly; and you would have been just as truly my wife if we had never gone further than the mairie."

"No, no, Gaston; for then Heaven would have no part in our marriage."

"My sweetest, I am content that you should be content. Women love old-world fancies."

There was a stand of carriages in front of the church. Philip Durand hailed two of them, and the wedding-party got in. The two bridegrooms had planned the day between them. They were to breakfast at the restaurant in the Place de la Bourse, chosen for the sake of its winter-garden, which gave an air of prettiness to the sordid fact of dinner. And just now, too, in this time of anxiety and ferment, the Bourse was the central point of Paris, where one could always hear the latest news. Just now Paris lived on tip-toe, as it were, palpitating, thrilling with the expectation of great victories—an Austerlitz, a Jena; the news might be flashed along the wires at any moment of the day or night. The telegraph clerks were waiting, fingers itching to record the triumph of Gallic arms. No one thought of Waterloo.

The bridal-party drove across the river, past the Louvre, into the Rue de Rivoli. What meant this new life and movement in the streets—men running to and fro, women standing in little groups, laughing, crying, hats waved in the air—the wild excitement of a race-course?

"One would think our happiness had driven all the world out of their wits," said Gaston, with his arm round his wife's slim waist.

There was only Madame Schubert with them in the carriage. She had insisted on taking the back seat, and sat smiling benignly on the happy lovers.

The coachman turned round and shouted to them as he rattled his horse over the broad space in front of the Theatre Francais. The pavement before the cafes was crowded with the usual loungers, smoking, talking, drinking; only the talk and the laughter was louder than usual, the crowd was denser, the air was full of electricity.

"A victory!" shouted the driver, looking round at his fare, and cracking his whip ferociously; "a great victory! MacMahon has made mincemeat of those Prussian dogs!"

"A victory, and on our wedding-day!" exclaimed Kathleen joyously; and then the sweet sensitive face clouded suddenly, and she said, "There can be no victory without soldiers slain. Many hearts of wives and mothers will be mourning to-day amidst all this joyousness. O Gaston, how thankful I ought to be that you were past the age for service!"

"True, dearest, I am better off here than with the Mobiots; but if the National Guard were called out I should have to shoulder my musket."

"But not to leave Paris," said Kathleen, nestling closer to him; "and there can be no fighting in Paris."

"Heaven forbid! No, love; one or two victories, and Prussia will give us whatever terms we ask. What can a herd of Huns and Vandals do against the fine flowers of our army, the heroes of Magenta and Solferino, the graybeards of Alma and Algiers?"

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Cause of Consumption.

Scrofula, manifesting itself in blotches, pimples, eruptions, salt-rheum, and other blemishes of the skin, is but too apt by and by to infect the delicate tissues of the lungs also, and result in ulceration, thus ending in consumption. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" will meet and vanquish the enemy in its stronghold of the blood and cast it out of the system. All druggists.

AGRARIAN OUTRAGE.

A man named Delahanty, who was occupying a farm at Kilbeggan, county of Meath, from which a tenant had been evicted, was shot dead on Tuesday night. A special says agrarianism, which was dormant but not dead during the summer, is awakening into renewed activity.

Wheeler's Tissue Phosphates.

It must be evident to many invalids who have been taking strychnine and alcholic preparations for old lingering complaints, who still find themselves in the same state of chronic debility as before using them, with increased nervous prostration from over-stimulation, that it is not sound nor judicious medication. A more physiological restorative method is secured by WHEELER'S PHOSPHATES AND CALISAYA, agents of nutrition, which supply the food elements of vital force.

FRENCH SUICIDES.

According to French official returns, there is a most remarkable increase of suicides in France. Five years ago the number per 100,000 was 17; it is now 19. Hanging and drowning are the most popular, and next in favor are fire-arms and charcoal fumes. April, May and June are the favorite months of Parisian suicide.

Honest and True.

This is eminently the case with Polson's NERVILINE, the great pain cure. It is an honest remedy, for it contains the most powerful, the purest, and most certain pain subduing remedies known to medical science. It is honest, for it does all it claims to do. It is honest, because it is the best in the world. It only costs 10 or 25 cents to try it and you can buy a bottle at any drug store. Nerviline cures toothache, neuralgia, pain in the back and side. All pains are promptly relieved by Polson's Nerviline.

POSTAL RATES.

For 1884 the British post office revenue increased by $4,000,000, while the telegraph revenue decreased $25,000. The latter is a temporary drop caused by some experiments in decreasing rates for certain distances and districts which will be soon adjusted.

Indigestion.

This seven-headed monster is more easily overcome by the use of Norman's Electric Belt than by any other remedy, and it cannot possibly do any injury. Guaranteed genuine. Circular and consultation free. A. Norman, 4 Queen street East, Toronto. J. D. Tully, Drug-gist, agent Peterborough. 4-tf.

PROTECTION AND FAILURES.

The Chicago Herald referring to the long list of bankruptcies in Canada under protection says:—It will not be long before Canadians will be asking themselves as Americans are: Does it pay to have ten years of panic and depression to one of prosperity, in order to enrich a few score of men who happen to have got on the inside?

A Total Wreck.

Many a strong frame has been totally wrecked by rheumatism. D. McCrimmon, of Lancaster, was cured of chronic rheumatism by Burdock Blood Bitters. It cures all blood impurities. 4-2

PORT HOPE.

Mayor Hugel presided at the Council for the last time on Monday last. General regret is expressed at parting with him. He has made an excellent Mayor, and it is hoped that he will at some time again give our citizens the benefit of his services.

A terrible accident occurred to a resident of Port Hope, named John Fallen, at Toronto, last Saturday afternoon. He was under the influence of liquor, and ran against a moving Pullman car at the Union station. He was thrown down with his head upon the track, and would have been instantly killed, had he not been rescued by an employee, who happened to be at hand. As it was both of his arms were so crushed by the wheels that they had to be amputated above the elbows.

SHEEP IN THE NORTHWEST.

Mr. W. D. Kerfoot, manager of the British American Ranch Company, says the Calgary Herald states that the sheep recently brought in by his company, numbering some 3,000, have all done well so far. The recent cold weather had apparentely no disastrous effect, the only loss being among a few of the late dropped lambs. Except with the hospital sheep, it has not been found necessary to give them any feed beyond what they have rustled for themselves. They are corralled every night and save this they have not required much attention.

DIVORCE AND MARRIAGE.

A decision of the Supreme Court of Canada on Monday, affirms that when a marriage has been contracted in the United States, a divorce obtained there is valid in Canada. This much appears to be certain. How much further in the recognition of American divorces, Canadian courts will go, remains to be seen. The advocates of reform in the present disgraceful state of the Canadian divorce laws are watching these cases with interest.

A Terrible Tragedy.

A terrible tragedy was happily averted the other evening by the presence of mind of the wife of one of our most respected citizens. The family consists of the husband, wife and two children. We briefly narrate the thrilling experience of this family. Mr. X. hurriedly entered the room where his wife and family were seated, and from the determined expression on his face, Mrs. X. saw at once that something was amiss. He demanded his razor which had accidentally been removed. The horror experienced by Mrs. X. may be imagined, and in order to divert his attention inquired for what purpose he wanted to use it. Imagine her relief when he stated his intention of removing a corn or two which ached terribly, and like a true woman she was equal to the occasion, for she had already purchased a bottle of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor, of which, on every head, she had heard nothing but praise. Avoid the evils of domestic life by using Putnam's Corn Extractor.

OVERDOSE OF NAMES.

The Prince of Wales' son, whose majority was recently celebrated, is suffering from a plethora of nomenclature. The papers call him by turns Edward, Albert and Victor, and by a combination of these names. It is understood that he will be officially known as Edward. The Prince of Wales intends to drop the name Albert at his coronation, and will reign as Edward VII., and when his son ascends the throne it will be as Edward VIII.

A Point For Izaak Walton.

There are many trite sayings all based on the fact that a genius is generally unknown to his own generation. A prophet is not without honor save in his own country. All great inventors or discoverers have been scoffed at by the people of their time. Thus it is that the world sees Keely, of motor fame, ridiculed, and Lanoon Drailliard, of Dog Point, fined. The world may not at this moment of mentioning the name know who Lanoon is. Mr. Drailliard lives in Canada and is the inventor of a new style of fishing. As geese saved Rome, so also do geese save Mr. Drailliard. He has practically bought these geese of his—thirty in number—to lay golden eggs. In other words he has taught them to fish, and the fish he sells for gold. To each of his thirty geese Mr. Drailliard attaches a string and at the end of the string is a trolling hook. The geese are let loose on a good fishing ground and they gently paddle along followed by one of the Drailliard family in a canoe or boat. Thirty glittering spoons flash under water as the gentle geese paddle along. As soon as a fish snaps at the whirling bauble and gets hooked, the goose thinks something has caught her leg, and she squawks and flutters around in the water. Drailliard paddles up, relieves the hook of the fish and sets the goose going again. When fish are biting quickly no man could ask livelier occupation than attending to a flock of fluttering geese, any one of which would be liable to go into hysterics at a moment's notice. The Canadians have failed to perceive that the name of Drailliard will yet be coupled with that of Walton. They have actually fined the inventor for infringing on the fishing laws. Nevertheless, Drailliard has inaugurated a new era in the pastime of fishing. Doubtless geese with trolling attachments will be added to the equipments of all fishing resorts. The man who takes a trip up to the flats will hereafter take his goose with him or hire one when he gets up there. Those who want a quiet day's sport will engage two or three geese, while people who want an exciting time will go in for a whole flock. The invention is now only in its infancy. Improvements are sure to follow. Probably a goose or two will be trained to pull the canoe, while the rest of the geese are trolling. Of course jealous rivals will be writing to the newspapers that the invention is nothing new after all; that the osprey and cormorant were used for catching fish long before the name of Drailliard was ever known to fame. On the China Sea birds are used to catch fish, and each bird has a ring around its throat so that it cannot swallow a fish when it catches one. These facts, however, will not detract from the future fame of Lanoon Drailliard, who will stand before the world for all ages to come as the man who introduced goose fishing in America. Shakspeare evidently had some inkling of this great invention when he said in the third act of Love's Labor Lost:

Until the goose came out of door.
Staying the odds by adding four.

The goose has now come out of doors and will add more than four if the trolling line don't break.

The duck as a decoy gives valuable aid to the sportsman in the fall, and now the goose will be the true and tried friend of the fisher. If some one would only egg on the hen to make herself useful it, the happy hunting grounds all our domestic fowls would have something to do with the recreation of mankind—"Fowl Play"—to quote Charles Reade.

A Flat Contradiction.

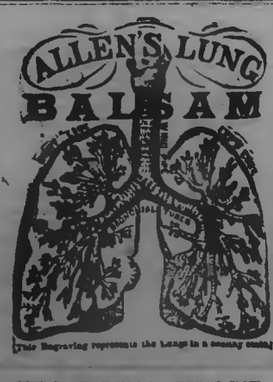
Some one has told you that your catarrh is incurable. It is not so. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy will cure it. It is pleasant to use and it always does its work thoroughly. We have yet to hear of a case in which it did not accomplish a cure when faithfully used. Catarrh is a disease which it is dangerous to neglect. A certain remedy is now your command. Avail yourself of it before the complaint assumes a more serious form. All druggists.

THE LARGEST ROOM IN THE WORLD.

The largest room in the world under one roof and unbroken by pillars is at St. Petersburg. It is 630 feet long by 150 in breadth. By daylight it is used for military displays, and a battalion can completely manœuvre in it. Twenty thousand wax tapers are required to light it. The roof of the structure is a single arch of iron, and it exhibits remarkable engineering skill in the architect.

Dangers of Delay.

If we are allowed to look into the future and see the fatal consequences that follow a neglected cold, how differently would our course be; could we realize our danger, how speedily we would seek a cure; but with many it is only when the monster disease has fastened its fangs upon our lungs that we awaken to our folly. What follows a neglected cold? Is it not disease of the throat and lungs, bronchitis, asthma, consumption, and many other diseases of like nature. It is worse than madness to neglect a cold, and it it folly not to have some good remedy available for this frequent complaint. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs, is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. This medicine is composed of several medicinal herbs, which exert a most wonderful influence in curing consumption and other diseases of the lungs and chest. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, soothes irritation and drives the disease from the system.



This Engraving represents the Lungs in a healthy state.

THE WAY IT WILL AFFECT YOU.

It excites expectoration and causes the lungs to throw off the phlegm or mucous; changes the secretions and purifies the blood; heals the irritated parts; gives strength to the digestive organs; brings the liver to its proper action, and imparts strength to the whole system. SUCH IS THE IMMEDIATE AND SATISFACTORY EFFECT that it is warranted to break up the most distressing cough in a few hours time, if not of too long standing. It is warranted TO GIVE ENTIRE SATISFACTION, EVEN IN THE most confirmed cases of Consumption! It is warranted not to produce costiveness (most remedies cause this trouble) or affect the head, as it contains no opium in any form. It is warranted to be perfectly harmless to the most delicate child, although it is an active and powerful remedy for restoring the system. There is no real necessity for so many deaths by Consumption, when ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM will prevent it if only taken in time. To Physicians having consumptive patients, and who, having failed to cure them with their own medicine, we would recommend to give ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM a trial. Sold by all Druggists.

Influence of Light on Health.

To those who have to take care of invalids (and nearly every one has at some time or other) the lecture to be given by Dr. Bell next Thursday evening in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, will be important, as we are sure it will be interesting. His subject will be "The Sanitary Influence of Light." It will be treated in a popular style, and we believe will repay any one for the trouble of attending. The price for admission will be 10 cents. The lecture is the third of the course of ten popular lectures arranged for by the Association. The lecture will begin at eight o'clock.

Picturesque Canada.

A good many subscribers to this work, after taking several numbers repented and refused to accept the remainder. A person thus refusing at Port Hope, has been sued by the Company, and the decision of Judge Benson is to the effect that the defendant must pay for the remaining numbers. The books had been delivered according to the order signed by the subscriber, as against which any other arrangement made by the agent and not embodied in the order, was not binding on the Company. Any person contemplating resistance of payment will find by the above judgment what are his chance of success.

Skating and Curling.

These two amusements are more popular here this winter than ever. The splendid new skating rink has given a decided boom to both. As we noted in last issue, the number of curlers is 120, while the number of skaters amounts to about 350. There are 70 ticket holders, and the nightly receipts from occasional skaters amounts to about $5, representing over thirty persons, which would make the number of skaters patronizing the rink about 350. On Friday nights the band plays in the gallery, the ice is filled with skaters, and the hoarse roar of the curlers rises from three well filled rinks. The company made a big point by removing the rink and enlarging it.

Phonetic Spelling.

On Thursday evening last, Mr. J. Long, M. A., of the Collegiate Institute staff, Lectured at the Y. M. C. A., Rooms on "English Spelling Reform." There was only a fair attendance, Mr. Heathfield's organ recital proving a strong counter attraction. Dr. Fife occupied the chair. The speaker sketched the origin and development of the English alphabet, and pointed out clearly its deficiencies and redundancies. The Phonetic alphabet was alluded to as fully representing the sounds of the English language. The difficulty in the way of the adoption of a phonetic system of spelling were also dwelt on. While graphically portraying the anomalies and crookedness of our system of spelling, the speaker was very non-committal in giving preference to any proposed plan of reform, or even to the idea of reform at all. The lecture was just about the right length, its points pithily put, easy to follow and was fully appreciated, and heartily applauded by the audience.

Dr. Sexton.

The Christian Guardian has the following flattering notice of the abilities of Dr. Sexton, who will preach in Peterborough, on Sunday February 1st, and lecture on Infidelity the three succeeding evenings:—

"Dr. Sexton preached morning and evening in the Metropolitan Church, and the congregations were delighted with his discourses. On Monday evening, in the same place, he gave a magnificent lecture entitled "Scientific Materialism a Fallacy." The audience was large and intelligent, and frequently greeted the lecturer with enthusiastic applause. Dr. Sexton has the happy faculty which is a rare endownment of making the most obstruse question of science or metaphysics so attractive as to awaken and sustain the interest of persons, even who, as a rule, are most indifferent to them. The lecture was a masterly effort, and impressed one with the conviction that the lecturer is thoroughly familiar with his ground. His exposure of the unsoundness of the premises of materialistic scepticism was complete."

Missionary Anniversary Services.

The missionary anniversary services will be held in the George and Charlotte streets Methodist churches on Sunday next Jan. 25th. Rev. Benjamin Longley M. A., pastor of the Dominion Church Ottawa, will preach in George street in the morning, and in Charlotte street in the evening. Rev. Dr. Sutherland, Missionary Secretary, will occupy the pulpit of Charlotte street at 11a. m. and at 7 p. m. will be in the George street church. A grand mass meeting of Sunday school scholars, teachers and friends of both churches, will assemble in George street church, at 2.30 p. m., when addresses will be deliv-ered by the above distinguished visitors. Collections at all the services in aid of the mission work., In listening to the above reverend gentlemen the public will be sure of an intellectual treat of a high order. Many will remember the eloquent manner of Rev. Dr. Sutherland as he took part in the Union discussion at the time of the conference here, and Rev Mr. Longley's reputation, promises a treat which few would care to miss.

The First Touch of the "Tankard."

Last Thursday afternoon two rinks of Peterborough Curlers went to Lindsay, to compete in the first draw for the primary competition for the Ontario Tankard. They were composed as follows: Rink No. 1, Messrs. J. H. Burnham, W. H. Clarton, G. Brown and T. P. Attrill, skip; Rink No. 2, Messrs. R. S. Davidson, W. Vanevery, A. McNeil and Dr. Boucher, skip. Messrs. Flavelle and McMurtry skipped the Lindsay rinks respectively. Peterborough won by twelve points, as will be seen by the following summary of the score:

Mr. Attril's Rink	34
Dr. Boucher's Rink	12
	46
Mr. Flavelle Rink	15
Mr. McMurtry's Rink	19
	34

Our Curlers are to be congratulated on their success, especally as they were pitted against a pair of the strongest rinks in Canada, the same that met with such great success at the Montreal Carnival last year. We hope they may have similiar success in the half dozen remaining contests, that intervene between this and the grand final eight-cornered bonspiel in Toronto, and also we hope the first touch of the Tankard will be extended till it ends in a firm grip of the splendid trophy.

Organ Recital.

The Organ Recital given by Mr. Heathfield, Organist, in Charlotte Street Church, was in every respect a pleasant success. Mr. Heathfield contributions to the programme consisted of two double numbers classical selections—which were rendered by him in an exceedingly effective manner. Mrs. Chambers, as usual, appeared to excellant advantage, in a solo and bore a leading part in duets and trios. She was in particularly good voice on the occasion, fairly surpassing herself, and charmingly accentuating the repution she has worthily achieved of being one of the principal lady soloistes of this district. Miss L. Wells a fine contralto, sang Barris "Shadow of the Cross" in a very pleasing manner, and her voice in chorus added greatly to the success of the numbers she took part in. Mr. A. L. Davis supplied a well sung baritone solo, as well as bearing a creditable part in duet with Mrs. Chambers. Mr. Galletly's singing of Handel's "Every Valley" was worthy of his reputation and that is no faint praise. Messrs Manning and Budden, with Miss Wells and Mrs. Chambers, gave an excellent quartette. Mr. Schneider's organ solos were promising efforts of a beginner. Mrs. Chambers, Mrs. Turner and Miss Wells, charmingly rendered a trio by Carschman. Handel's "Hallelujah to the Father" by Mr. Heathfield, closed a judiciously selected and excellently performed programme.

Watches, Clocks, Jewellry, etc., carefully repaired and warranted at Hughan's. Office lately occupied by Elias Burnham, Simcoe Steet. 18-tf

ANNUAL MEETING.

The West Riding Agricultural Society.

The annual meeting of the West Riding Agricultural Society was held in the Council Chamber, Peterborough, on Wednesday. There was an exceedingly large attendance of members, many times larger than at preceding annual meetings.

Mr. James Campbell, President, occupied the chair, and the Secretary read the report of the directors, which recounted the agreement providing for the purchase of the new grounds—the Morrow property—and eulogised the selection. Owing to no exhibition having been held last fall the funds of the Society showed a credit balance of $308.37—the gross receipts amounting to $983.36, and the expenditure to $584.98, including payments to township societies. The report also referred to the reports from the township societies, which showed that the Smith, Ennismore and Lakefield Society had a credit balance of $6.25, and the South Monaghan Society a deficit of $30.94, offset, however, in the latter case, by good subscriptions amounting to $80. New grounds and buildings had been secured, with a balance of $166.75 to pay thereon.

On the suggestion of Mr. Davidson, of Smith, the Secretary read the agreement entered into by the Directors with Mr. R. A. Morrow for the lease of grounds in the south part of the town, the chief provisions of which have been already published in these columns.

Mr. McClelland moved, seconded by Mr. G. W. Fitzgerald, that the meeting confirm the agreement just recited.

Mr. T. E. Bell said the directors' meeting in December seetled the matter. He had objected to the directors making the agreement as beyond their powers, the Act in reference to calling a meeting for the purpose, not having been complied with. The agreement was illegal. He moved, seconded by Mr. A. Scott, that the matter be left to the directors and that no expression of opinion be taken on the agreement.

Mr. Geo. A. Cox said he did not wish to enter into a discussion as to the merits of the north and south sites, for if the society has decided to secure new grounds now is the time to get them. He pointed out that it would be wiser and more business-like to purchase the grounds outright at once. The necessary purchase money could be got at a low rate of interest, that would amount to very little more than the rent now proposed; besides, if the purchase were delayed ten years, the value of the land would increase. He meant his remarks as having no allusion to the offer he had made. If the south grounds were preferred, why not buy them at once. He moved, in amendment to the amendment,—That in the opinion of the meeting the confirmation of the lease was not desirable, but that the matter be left to the directors, or a committee, to see if land in the vicinity could not be purchased at once on, better terms

Mr. Carnegie made explanations as to the selection of the present site, and pointed out its desirability and advantages.

Mr. T. E. Bell rejoined by showing the great pecuniary advantage to be gained by accepting Mr. Cox's offer, for the north end site.

Both amendments were put and lost and the original motion carried.

Annual Meeting of Shareholders.

The annual meeting of the shareholders of the Little Lake Cemetery company was held in the council chamber on Monday afternoon, January 19th.

There were present, Messrs. J. J. Lundy, president, in the chair, Jas. Edwards, secretary-treasurer, Judge Dennistoun, Rev. V. Clementi, C. Stapleton, R. Kingan, R. H. Green, Geo. Hilliard, John Carnegie, Adam Dawson, John Garbutt, G. W. Hall, C. W. Sawers, C. D. McDonald, Wm. Cumming, G. M. Roger, John McClelland, Joseph Hall and E. B. Edwards.

THE REPORT OF THE DIRECTORS:

Mr. Lundy, president, read the Report of the Directors, which referred to the death of Mr. Wm. Eastland, for many years a director. The shareholders were congratulated on the financial prosperity of the company during the past year, and the improved appearance af the cemetery, as the result of the company taking charge of attending to all the lots. The Treasurer's statement showed a cash balance of $1,478.92. Besides, the directors were able to invest $1,000 in a town debenture.

The receipts from care of lots was reduced by about $300, but the resulting neatness and beauty of the cemetery fully compensated. During the year 74 improved lots and 26 single graves were sold, realizing $1,719. The sum of $1,190.25 was received for work done, and as against this the sum paid for wages exclusive of caretaker's salary, was $755.90, leaving a credit balance of $434.35. There were still unsold the following improved lots, without taking into consideration ground not yet improved:

159 selling at $17.50 each		$ 8,032.50
679 " " 25.00	"	16,975.00
25 " " 30.00	"	750.00
Total		$25,757.50

In answer to a question by Mr. Kingan, Mr. Kelly stated that about 500 or 600 lots remained to be occupied. Mr. Lundy said the directors were considering the enlargement of the Cemetery.

SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT:

The clear and concise report of the superintendent, Mr. John Kelly, showed that the total receipts of the year were $2,909.26, as against expenditures, $1,319.73, while there was due on accounts, $312.75. The report detailed the various improvements made in the cemetery the past year, which have heretofore been fully noted in these columns, and many suggestions as to improvements which the directors show a disposition to act upon. Among these is the suggestion to provide something more permanent than wooden stakes to mark the bounds of lots. The directors were very properly requested to urge upon the town the necessity of cribbing the lake along the approach to the cemetery to prevent its destruction. There are about 1,150 lots improved and available for sale.

SECRETARY-TREASURER'S REPORT:

Mr. James Edwards made his tenth annual report, as secretary. After alluding touchingly to the imminence of death, the report stated that since the organization of the company, 33 years ago, only eleven of the original proprietors were living, and out of the 9 original directors only three remained—Messrs. Judge Dennistoun, E. Chamberlain and R. D. Rogers. The number of lots sold was 342 in excess of last year. The superintendent paid into the treasury $2,909 being $46 more than last year.

DIRECTORS FOR 1885:

The ballot for Directors, Messrs. J. J. Hall and C. W. Sawers, scrutineers, resulted in the selection of the old board, viz:—Messrs. J. Stevenson, Judge Dennistoun, J. J. Lundy, Rev. V. Clementi, G. M. Roger, Chas. Stapleton, Jas. Edwards, Geo. A. Cox and Hon. R. Hamilton.

CHEESE.

Mr. Wm. Heapy & Son's annual Liverpool provision circular under date of 27th Dec. 1884, says:—"The past year has been marked by violent fluctuations, mainly caused by financial disturbances in America which seem to have permeated all the commercial centres of Europe, causing great disquietude and unsettling values. As the leading articles have now, however, reached a low basis of value some cereals even lower than has ever been known before. This, coupled with the excellent crops everywhere, makes it reasonable to expect a renewal of confidence which will cause a reaction.

We sincerely hope that 1885 will prove a good year to all our friends.

CHEESE.—The imports of this article into Liverpool from Dec. 17, 1883, to present date, are 2,241,463 boxes. Present stock, though not yet published, are considered to be on an average with former seasons.

The first quarter of the year was marked by dull though advancing markets, and higher prices were realized for the fine old stock; but when new cheese were brought forward they commanded a ready sale. The high prices realized induced large shipments, and a rapid decline in value occurred, which continued for some time, but speculation brought about a sharp reaction, and the market has since been a dull and dragging one, with a tendency to higher prices.

It may be remarked that this article has paid better than any other farm produce, and from the stimulus of being a profitable business to the producer, it is likely to receive more attention, and with other favorable conditions result in a larger production during the coming year.

The same firm reports of cheese under date of Dec. 31st, 1884:—The market closes with more disposition to buy. The stocks of fine well kept summer makes are being reduced. Winter made skims and half meats are in small supply, and are freely saleable. Choice September and October makes are firmly held. Quotations are:—Extra fine fall makes 60s to 64s.; fine August 52s. to 58s.; fine summer made 48s. to 52s.; good 40s. to 46s.; also useful late made and half meats 35s. to 45s.; useful ordinary makes 25s to 35s.; common 5s. to 18s

Hereditary Scrofula.

Are you aware that in your blood the taint of scrofula has a prominent place? This is true to every one. It is liable at any time, on the slightest provocation, to develop itself in some insidious disease. Consumption and many other diseases are outgrowths of this impurity of the blood, Shaker Blood Syrup has a wonderful power over all scrofulous troubles, as the remarkable testimonials we have received unmistakably prove.

We refer by permission to Mrs. P. Elliott, Hanover, Maine, who was cured by Shaker Blood Syrup of 11 Scrofula Sores, the severity of which confined her to the house for two years. Six months, previous to taking Shaker Blood Syrup, she could not get about her room without crutches. Her friend says I did not think it possible for her to live many months she was reduced no a mere skeleton. Her cure is hardly less than a miracle. There is no doubt that in Shaker Blood Syrup, we have the most remarkable medicine that has ever been produced, and a positive cure for Syphilis and Scrofula in their numerous forms.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Inaugural Meeting.

The statutory meeting of the Town Council was held on Monday morning at eleven o'clock, when the Mayor elect, Mr. Geo. A. TAKING STOCK!

No duty devolving upon the business man is so pertinent as that of Taking Stock. Books have been called the merchant's repeating clock, to tell him how he goes on. By "Taking Stock" and a comparison with his books, the trader is enabled to arrive at a reasonable computation of the business done during the year, and to tell whether the balance on the pages of his ledger shall be for or against him. It is not only the recognized duty of the active tradesman to "take stock" of his goods, his trade, his custom, but of his competitors.

Just now it is the manifest duty of our citizens to "take stock" of our newly elected Town Councillors to see what are the indications as to the filling in of Spaulding's Bay.

The universal application of the rule is shown in the particularity with which young ladies 'take stock' of prospective matrimonial chances.

In short—tradition, business usage, custom, convenience, and other good and sufficient reasons all corroborate the advisability of "Taking Stock."

This is the month we "take stock," and the balance of our WINTER GOODS will now be cleared out AT COST.

ONTARIO LEGISLATURE.

Fifth Parliament—Second Session.

(Special by Telegraph to THE EXAMINER.)

TORONTO, January 28th, 1885.

This day, at 3 o'clock p.m., the Hon. John Beverly Robinson, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Ontario, proceeded in state to the Chamber of the Legislative Assembly, and, being seated on the throne, was pleased to open the second session of the Fifth Legislature of Ontario with the following

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE:

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly:—

It is with much pleasure that I meet you again as a Legislative Assembly for the discharge of important duties which devolve upon you under our Constitution.

THE BOUNDARY DECISION.

In pursuance of the agreement between this Province and the Province of Manitoba, which last session received your approval:

The question of our Provincial boundaries has been submitted to the Judicial Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council, and now I am happy to have it in my power to congratulate you that so far as their Lordships dealt with the question, they have adjudged our true boundaries to be these which were awarded by the Arbitrators, and have ever since been insisted on by this Province, in opposition to the Dominion authorities, and to the claim of Manitoba.

My Government was anxious that this should be submitted at the same time to the same tribunal, the question of our whole northern boundary, and also the question of title to certain lands to which the Federal Government has set up a claim on other grounds. The correspondence on these subjects, and some other correspondence which has taken place on matters affecting the territory will be laid before you.

ESTABLISHING ORDER.

After the decision of the Privy Council, I issued a proclamation bringing into force the act passed at your last session, for establishing the Provisional District of Thunder Bay. By another proclamation authorized by the same statute that part of the Province which lies west of the old Provincial line from Hunter's Island, has been erected into a territorial district under the name of "The Territorial District of Rainy River." Legislation will now be necessary for the more effectual administration of justice and the establishment of registry and surrogate offices in this territory, and a bill for these purposes will be submitted for your consideration. I commend to your attention also the propriety of encouraging settlers and settlements by free grants in specified portions of the territory.

RIVERS AND STREAMS.

I have to congratulate you that since your last session her Majesty's Privy Council has pronounced a judgment in regard to the legal rights of the public in the rivers and streams of the Province, affirming the views so strenuously maintained by the Provincial Legislature.

THE LICENSE DECISION.

I have also to express my satisfaction that the questions submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada touching the validity of the License Act passed by Federal Parliament in 1883 and 1884, have been answered by the Supreme Court to the effect that with certain inconsiderable exceptions these enactments exceeded the jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament. The confusion which these acts created has thus been removed.

BOUNTIFUL HARVEST AND LOW PRICES.

The Province has been favoured with a bountiful harvest of farm produce, and the official returns of the Department of Agriculture again show that in staple cereals, the average yield is larger than obtains in any other equal area on the continent.

It is however a mattter for serious regret that owing to the low market, prices which have prevailed for some time, the full commercial benefit of the harvest, has not been realized to any such extent as in former years.

THE LUMBER TRADE.

It is to be regretted that the lumber trade of the Province, from which a large portion of our revenue is derived has not escaped the depression which has affected other industries here and elsewhere during the past year, but our lumber producers will participate in any improvement arising in the trade of Great Britain and the United States, which are the principal markets for the products of our forests.

AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION.

In the work of agricultural education and experiment, the Agricultural College and Model Farm continue to be carried on with success.

The professors of the College, in addition to their ordinary work have recently conducted Institutes in different parts of the Province, for the purpose of discussing with our farmers improved methods of agriculture and other matters of special importance to the farming community. These Institutes have excited much interest, have been largely attended and appear likely to prove of considerable service to the great industry for the benefit of which they were designed.

IMMIGRATION.

The number of immigrants who settled in the Province during the past year is not so large as in the preceeding year, but I am glad to say that they have, on the whole, been of a somewhat better class, and have been better fitted to earn a livelihood for themselves than many who came to the Province in the previous year.

Owing to the present abundance of labor and scarcity of employment in all parts of the Province you will be asked to appropriate for the purpose of settling immigrants, a sum considerably less than the expenditure in recent years.

You will be glad to learn that, notwithstanding the inducement offered by other sections of the Dominion, the volume of immigration into the newer portions of the Province has been large, and has considerably exceeded that of the preceding year.

INSANE ASYLUMS.

Nothwithstanding the increased accommodation which has been provided for the insane during the past few years, it is my duty to inform you that a further expenditure for a similar purpose is again necessary. Additional buildings at Orillia for the idiotic are also required, the present buildings being insufficient for the proper care and custody of these now in confinement, and there being also numerous applications for admission, with which, for want of room, it has been impossible to comply.

EXTENSION OF THE FRANCHISE.

The important subject of the extension of the franchise, will, I trust, receive your careful attention.

SCHOOL LAW AMENDMENTS.

Owing to the changes made in the acts respecting public, high and separate schools since the Consolidated Acts of 1878, it is desirable that another revision should be made. Bills for this purpose will be submitted, containing amendments, which, I trust, will simplify the law, and at the same time extend still further the advantages of the system of education, which has contributed so much to the intellectual life and vigour of our people.

The subject of higher education has received special attention from my Government during the recess, and considerable progress has been made towards a federation of the Universities of the Province, from which valuable results may be expected.

ENLARGING THE POWER OF COUNTY COUNCILS.

Among other measures in preparation for your consideration are a bill for extending the jurisdiction of the county council; a bill for further promotion of the efficiency of the administration of justice of the Province, and a bill for simplifying titles and transfers of real estate in certain cases.

THE BRIBERY PLOT.

The judges appointed under the act of last session to enquire into certain attempts to corrupt members of the Legislature, have made their report, which, with the evidence, I will cause to be submitted for your information.

DEPARTMENTAL REPORTS.

The reports also of the various Departments of the public service for the past year will be laid before you.

THE ESTIMATES

for the current year have been prepared with a view to economy and efficiency and due regard in every case to the main object of public interest which it is desirable to aid and foster.

I feel assured that you will devote yourselves with earnestness and assiduity to the consideration of the subjects which I have mentioned and to all other matters affecting the public interests.

OMEMEE.

On Wednesday evening last a very pleasant event took place in Omemee, being the marriage of Mr. John O. Tisdale, one of our most popular young men, to Miss Letitia Mitchell. The ceremony was performed at the residence of the bride's parents by Rev. J. C. Wilson.

The Guelph Mercury says:—

"It is safe to say the audience which greeted Rev. Dr. Sexton on Thursday evening enjoyed an intellectual treat far beyond their expectation, much as they had heard of the renowned lecturer. The audience were so enrapt by the speaker's words that at the expiration of the two hours which he occupied, every person experienced a regret that he had finished so soon."

Our New Watchmaker, Mr. Hughan, comes well recommended, and we are sure any work entrusted to him will be done in good style. Office lately occupied by Elias Barnham, Simcoe Street. 18-tf

KEENE.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Excellent sleighing and steady weather with Keene frosts at night and brisk north winds prevailing in the day-time as we write.

Our architectural friend, Jack Frost, has at last successfully completed his undertaking, and has bridged Rice Lake in every direction, in a most satisfactory manner.

REAL ESTATE TRANSFER.

We understand Mr. Glover is about selling or has sold his large stone mills at Allandale to a gentleman from Peterborough, who has been foreman of Mr. Deane's mills in that town. More power to his elbow! We sincerely hope that he may succeed in this enterprise to the fullness of his heart.

Mr. Thomas Walker, the obliging and attentive postmaster of Villiers, has resigned the office, and Mr. Wm. Weir is his successor. The appointment is a judicious one, and we have no doubt will give general satisfaction. The new post office is to be in the large building on the corner in which Mr. Martin also intends opening a general store.

W. Fairweather & Co. have a sale of dry goods, etc., going on at present in the old Montreal House at the foot of the hill here. Private sales in the day-time, and auction in the evening, conducted by Mr. Haggart, their gentlemanly and thoroughly competent auctioneer.

HEALTH HINT.

Diphtheria has paid a visit to the family of Mr. James Neish of Otonabee. Fortunately, the type of disease is mild, and so far the little folks are all doing well. Some quantities of roots in the cellar, that were slightly touched by frost before being stored, have no doubt, caused the trouble. Look well to your cellars.

A VETERAN RESIGNS.

At the last meeting of the Otonabee council, the ordinary routine business was attended to, and the following officers for the current year appointed:—Assessor, David Nelson; Collector, Wm. Drummond; Auditors, Wm. Lang, Esq. and Jas. M. Drummond. The above gentlemen are all re-appointed, which speaks well for their integrity and fitness. Geo. Reid, Esq., however, has made a break in the chain of a long and valued service. For thirty-five years Mr. Reid has held, off and on, the posts of secretary and treasurer for the township of Otonabee; but these offices he resigned at the above named council meeting, much to the consternation and regret of the whole community, for the labors of the position were arduous, and very complicated, owing to many extraneous duties connected with it; but during the long course of his official career he has never faltered nor erred in his many tasks, and has ever been distinguished for urbanity of manners and unquestionable integrity. His son, Mr. John Reid, who is in every way fitted for the post, is likely to be appointed township secretary, and in that case, Mr. Reid, sen., is willing to re-assume the treasurership. We know this arrangement will give general satisfaction, but it cannot be consummated till the next meeting of the council. It will also give Mr. Reid in his advancing years great relief from the almost prison life of official duties.

A DIRE DISPUTE.

A rather noteworthy incident occurred in this usually quiet little place last Friday. It seems that Mr. Gould's livery proprietor, of Norwood, sent his son to Keene with a commercial traveller that day, and they put up at the hotel of our friend John Gall. When young Gould was about leaving, our host fixed upon the horse and would not let it go till the bill should be settled. This, the young fellow declared he had done, while just as stoutly friend John denied it. Well, the horse was put back into the stable, and young Gould went home by train. Next morning, (Saturday) Mr. Gould himself arrived by morning express, and from ten a. m. till two p. m. the battle raged loud and strong in all the gall of bitterness, but no settlement. The horse was a second time left, and Mr. Gould returned to Norwood. Mr. Gould is not a man to be imposed upon, and we fear that honest John has got himself into a fix. Honest, no doubt, he is in his contention; but even honesty has sometimes a bad memory, and especially when we remember that it sometimes sees a star, "Where nae star should be."

CORRIGENDA.

In our report last week of the Otonabee Agricultural Society occurs two compositor's errors—first, "Wm. J. Milliar," should read Wm. J. Miller. Second, for "A. Mitchell," read A. Matchett.

CARNIVAL.

The first carnival of the season was held on Tuesday evening, the 20th inst. The management had decorated the Rink very prettily with evergreens and Chinese lanterns, and the ice was in splendid condition. The attendance, however, we regret to say, was not as large as might have been expected. There were some very handsome costumes, indeed. The Peterborough Fire Brigade Band was in attendance and gave more than usual satisfaction. Red and blue rosettes were presented to the best dressed ladies and gentlemen, first and second. Mrs. LeFevre and Mrs. W. M. Graham acted as judges for the ladies; Messrs. Barlee and Bird for the gentlemen. The following are the names, with characters represented:—

Metropolitan Tabernacle Pulpit.

A Sermon by C. H. Spurgeon, at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, Newington.

THE LORD WITH TWO OR THREE.

"Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them."—Matthew xviii., 20.

We have in the verses preceding the text a mention of the first church-meeting of which I remember to have found mention in the New Testament. The Saviour declares of His assembled people, "Verily I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." A few believers, gathered out of the world, have met in the name of the Lord Jesus, to attend to the wants of His household here below. It is a case of discipline. A brother has trespassed against another brother. The offended one has sought him out privately, and by personal expostulation has endeavoured to bring him to a better mind; but he has failed. He has then taken with him two or three brethren of the church, and they have together pleaded with the offender that he would do that which is right; but he is obstinate: even in the presence of two or three witnesses he persists in his trespass, and refuses to be won over by kindly entreaty. It only remains that they shall tell it to the church. The church is grieved; it hears the case patiently, and waits upon God in prayer. It asks guidance, and, at last, finding that that there is no help for it, removes the member of the body who is not in true sympathy with the rest, and is acting as if he had not the life of God in him. This being done, according to Christ's rule—justly, impartially, lovingly, with prayer—that which is done by a few men and women assembled here below, is registered in the court above. What they have bound on earth is bound in heaven. What they have loosed on earth is loosed in heaven It is a happy privilege when they can loose the bound one. When repentance is expressed, when the backslider is restored, when the church has reason to believe that the work of the Spirit is truly in the heart of the offender, then the bond is loosed on earth, and it is also loosed in heaven. The meetings of God's servants for the necessary discipline of the church are not trifling meetings, but there is a divine power in them, since what they do is done in the name of Jesus Christ their Lord. Oh, that church-meetings were more generally looked at in this light!

Next, we are introduced to the prayer-meeting: in the nineteenth verse we read, "Again I say unto you, that if two of you," two of you, "shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven." It is a very little meeting, it could not be smaller to be a meeting at all. There are only two there, but they are two praying men, and two believers. They are two of the Lord's own servants, whose great concern is His kingdom; they are two earnest persons who very greatly desire the prosperity of the church. They are two of kindred spirit, agreeing in love to God and the truth, and they have talked over the matter, and considered it, and they feel moved by the Spirit of God to unite their applications about one important subject. Will they meet together and pray in vain? As they are only two, will not the meeting fail to count with God? Assuredly not; the Lord Jesus Christ has aforehand left them this gracious promise, that if they shall agree on earth touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of His Father which is in heaven: they are only two, but this suffices to secure them the promised hearing.

Perhaps the exact petition which they offer may not apparently be answered. Remember that God often hears the prayer of our prayers, and answers that rather than our prayers themselve; by which I mean, that there is an inner soul within true prayer which is the quickening life of true supplication. The body of prayer may die, but the soul of prayer lives and abides for ever. If I am asked what my inmost heart prays for, I should reply, "The heart of my prayer is —'The will of the Lord be done.'" Is not this the essence, quintessence, and extract of the prayer by which our Saviour taught us how to pray? He bade us say, "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." Is not this the finale of His own prayers, the entreaty of His passion, His deepest and yet His highest pleading, "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt"? Now, we want the will of the Lord to be done: we do not desire it to remain as a secret decree, but actually to be fulfilled; and it is ours, as it were, with the finger of prayer, to turn the folded leaves one by one, and exhibit them to the light of fact, so that the purpose of God may become an accomplished thing in answer to the prayer of His people. Mean we anything more than this by our prayers? I think that, when well instructed, this is neither more nor less than we intend, and if it be real so, and we come together, delighting ourselves in the Lord, He will most certainly give us the desire of our hearts. When we come together with our wills sanctified into the likeness of the divine will, then our prayer succeeds, till it becomes no presumption even if we dare to say with Luther, in one of his bold prayers, "Oh, my Lord, let my will be done this time!" He ventured to speak thus because he felt sure that his will must be in accordance with the Divine will. Only there do you stand on solid ground; only there may you plead without any reserve for special blessings.

Now, thirdly, we come to a promise which includes every meeting of any sort or kind which is for Christ's glory. So long as it is a sacred meeting of saintly men and women for the purposes of devotion or service—for the purposes of prayer or praise, or whatever else may be most suitable for the occasion, here is the promise for them—"For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." This sanctions the church-meeting, this prepares the prayer-meeting.

Now, first, we shall mention with regard to these meetings, matters not essential; then, secondly, we shall carefully mention a matter most essential; and, thirdly, we shall dwell upon an assurance most encouraging.

I. First, let us speak of MATTERS NOT ESSENTIAL.

At the outset we know that numbers are not essential, for "where two or three are together in my name, there am I." It is very important in a large church that there should be large gatherings for prayer, for it would be an evidence of a slighting of the ordinance if a fair proportion of the members did not come together for that holy and blessed exercise But, still, where that cannot be—where the church itself is small—where for divers reasons which we need not here recapitulate, it is not possible for many to gather together—it is a very encouraging circumstance that numbers are not essential to success in prayer. "Where two or three are gathered together." The number is mentioned, I suppose because that is about the smallest number that could make a congregation. We can hardly call it a congregation where the minister has to say, "Dearly beloved Roger, the Scripture moveth us in divers places," as we have heard was once done by a clergyman: truly it was an assembly of two, and so was within the number, and under the circumstances might find the Lord present. But two out of a large church would have been a wretched sign of decline. If two were all that met out of a great church it would be a sadly little company, and the blessing might be withheld.

Still, the number has this advantage, that it is the readiest congregation to be gathered. It is not difficult to make up two or three. A husband and wife: there are two. A husband and wife and a child: there are three. Or there may be two unmarried sisters, or a widow and child: two can be easily made up. Where there are no children, there may be a husband and a wife and a servant: and these are three. Where there is no wife, perhaps there are two brothers, or a brother and a sister, or perhaps three sisters; and where there is no relation, but a man lives alone, it is not impossible surely, in the most deserted reigon for him to find one or other or two others with whom he can meet. It is a very handy congregation, because it can meet in a bedroom; it can meet in a kitchen; it can meet in a closet: it can meet anywhere, for it is so small. It is also easily hidden away; in prosecuting times two or three could get together in a corner, a cave, a cellar, or a garret. For the matter of that, two or three may be in prison together, and they can pray in one narrow cell; or they can do what Latimer and Ridley did when they stood back to back at the stake, and lifted up their hearts as one man. That was brave praying, when the two bishops stood to burn with devotion as well as to burn with fire for Christ's sake. I am sure that Jesus was in the midst of them when they met upon the faggots. Two people may meet in the street or in the field; they can get together in the corner of an omnibus or a train, and unite their supplications.

Next, the rank of the people is not important. Does it say, "Where two or three ministers are gathered together in my name?" By no means. Does it say, "Where two or three instructed Christians, advanced in experience, are met together?" No, there is no such limit expressed or implied. In the matter of prayer no special boon is set apart for those who are eminent in grace. We do not read, "Where two or three full-grown believers are met;" much less does it say, "Where two or three rich people are met together." No distinction is made. If they are the people of God, and if they are the little ones whom the Lord has been describing, humble and lowly in spirit, where two or three of such are met together in the Redeemer's name, "there," says Jesus, "am I in the midst of them." It may be that a poor man and his wife are praying together before retiring for the night. The Lord is there. A couple of servants unite their supplications in the kitchen. The Lord is there. Two or three little boys have come out of school, and they love the Lord, and so they have met in a corner to pray. The Lord is there. Do you remember how Luther was encouraged while he, and Melancthon too, were down in the dumps about the Lord's work? They were dreadfully downcast; but as Luther passed by a room, he heard the voices of children and he stopped. Some women, the wives of good men, had gathered with a few holy children, and they were praying to the Lord to let the Gospel spread in the teeth of the Pope and all his friends from below. Luther went back and said, "It is all right. The children are praying to God. The Lord will hear them. Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hath he ordained strength." So you see in the promise of the divine presence there is nothing said about numbers, and nothing about rank.

Neither is a word said as to place, except that it says "where two or three." "Where" means anywhere. In any place where two or three are met together in Christ's name there is he. Not in the cathedral only, but in the barn; not in the tabernacle only, but in the field. "Where" means everywhere. In the loneliest place, in the far-away forest, in an upper room, or on board a ship, or in an hospital.

Anywhere Christ will be with you when you are with him in prayer. Have you never read how the Covenanters, when the times of peace came on, and they could worship in the kirk, yet, nevertheless, often looked back with sadness to the glorious days they had in the mosses and on the bleak hill-sides when they were hunted by Claverhouse's dragoons, and the Lord covered them with the skirts of his garments? See the preacher reading his text by the lightning flash, and hear his voice sounding afterwards amid the thick darkness! The saints who had gathered together to hear the Word of God had an overpowering sense of his presence which nothing could excel. Anywhere we meet for prayer and expect Jesus to be in the midst of us. The place is not essential even in the lowest degree. When I see people running out every morning to church, it savours of a superstition which ought to have died out long ago. When you look into the church you will find no great number assembled; generally the rector and one or two of the family make up the company. But if the whole parish came trooping out to church, I should say that they had better stay at home and pray with their families. Family prayer is a better institution than the tinkling of a bell every morning, and the collecting of people in a church. Have a bell of your own, and be your own priest, and open your Bible, and pray yourself with your children, and that will be a more acceptable sacrifice than if you plod in your superstition half-a-mile to a so-called sacred place to enjoy the voice of a supposed priestly man. Dedicate your parlor: consecrate your sittingroom; make your kitchen into a church for God: for there is no sacredness in bricks, and mortar, and stone, and stained glass. The outside of a church is as holy as the inside. Far ought such an age as this to be from the revolting superstition which makes the houses of the godly to be common and unclean in order to magnify the parish church. May we get back to the simplicity of Christ! "Neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, shall men worship the Father." The time is coming, yea and now is, when in every place God seeketh spiritual worshippers who worship him in spirit and in truth.

And, once more, there is nothing said here about the form which the meeting is to take. "Where two or three are met together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." "There are going to break bread together." Very well, they are quite at liberty to do so, and if they have met in the Lord's name, he will be in the midst of them. "But they are going to hear a sermon." All right: so they may. Preaching is an ordinance of God, and he will be in the midst of them. "But they are neither going to hold the communion, nor to hear a sermon; they are going to pray.' Quite right: the Lord will be in their midst. "But they are not going to pray, that is to say, vocally; they are going to read a chapter, and sit and think of it." Quite right: the Lord will be in the midst of them. "But they are not even going to read, or sing, or pray vocally; they are going to sit still." The Lord will be in the midst of them if they meet in the name of Jesus.

So much on non-essentials,

II. But now, secondly, there is A MATTER WHICH IS MOST ESSENTIAL, and that is they should be gathered in Christ's name. Does not this mean that the gathering must be that of Christians met together as Christians to have fellowship with Jesus Christ and so with one another? Does it not mean that they must be met together in obedience to his will as they understand it, to carry out his will as they find it in the New Testament, and as the Spirit of God opens up that New Testament to them? Does it not also mean that they must be met together distinctly for the Lord's purposes?—to honour Christ, to bring glory to his name, to worship him? They must be met together not to a kind of mystic, invisible, unknown Christ, but in his name, for Christ has a name—a distinct personality, a character; and that must be known, loved, and honored: or else we have not met in his name.

And does not this gathering into his name mean that we are, first, to be known by his name, and then to get close to one another by drawing more and more near to him? The way to be gathered together is to be gathered by him and to him. If all press to the centre, they all press to one another. If each man's aim be personal fellowship with Christ, personal knowledge of Christ, personal trust in Christ, personal adoration of Christ, personal service to Christ, and the getting of a personal likeness to Christ, then we are all coming together. While our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son, Jesus Christ, we also have fellowship with all the saints. This should be the great object of all our gatherings, to be brought more fully into Christ; and all of us must meanwhile believe that Jesus is in the midst and we must come together unto him. You do not meet to-night to listen to a certain preacher, but because through that preacher you have been helped to get nearer to the Lord Jesus Christ, and, therefore, you are glad to hear his voice, and glad to worship God with those friends with whom you have fellowship in Christ. You do well to come where you have found Christ before and you do well to stay away from any gathering wherein you have not found Christ. Some, as they go out of the place where they usually worship, are sadly compelled to cry, "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him." Do not go where Jesus is not present; and if distinctly you are obliged to say, "I have heard sermon after sermon almost without mention of his name; I have gone for months together, and I have not had a sweet though of heavenly fellowship arising out of the service;" then do not go there again. Do not go to any church or meeting-house merely because you have been in the habit of going. Sabbaths are too precious to be thrown away by sitting still to be starved. Even a cow does not care to be tied up in an empty stall, and a horse does not run to an empty manger. Seek the Lord Jesus, and do not rest till you find him.

III. AN ASSURANCE MOST ENCOURAGING —"Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.

First then, very briefly, how is the Lord Jesus there? Notice the exact words. Catch the gracious sense. He does not say, "I will be there," but he does say, "I am there." He is the first at the gathering; "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I." Not "I will be," though that is true; but He puts it in a more Divine fashion,—"There am I." Jesus is there already before another arrives. He is the first in the congregation, the first comer in the assembly, and they come gathering to Him. He is in the centre, and they come to Him. "There am I."

How is He there? As we, His people, meet, He is there, because He is in every one of them. It is a blessed thing to see Christ in His people. Did you ever try to do that? I know some who try to see the old man in Christ's people. It does not take them long to see the body of sin and death, and it is not a refreshing sight when they do see it. But, oh, to see Christ in His people—what a charming sight it is! And I think, with regard to every child of God that I know, that I can see a little more of Christ in him than I can see in myself. I cultivate the practice of endeavouring to see my Lord in all His people, for He is there, and it is irreverent not to honor Him. He is with them, and is in them; why should we doubt it? That is something worth remembering. If so many temples of the Holy Ghost come together, why, surely, the Holy Ghost Himself is there, and the place whereon they stand is holy ground. Jesus is in their thoughts, in their objects, in their desires; ay, and in their groans, in their sorrows, in their spirits, in their inmost souls. Where two or three are gathered together in His name, there is He in the midst of them.

And then the Lord Jesus Christ is with the assembly by His Spirit. The Spirit is His representative, whom He has sent as the Comforter to abide with us for ever. You must have felt Him sometimes convincing you of sin, humbling you, and bowing you down; then cheering you, comforting you, enlightening you, guiding you, relieving you, sustaining you, sanctifying you. Oh, what light He brings! What life He brings! What love He brings! What joy He brings! When the Spirit of God is in the midst of God's people what merry days they have! What days of heaven upon earth!

Next, where is the Lord in the assembly? He has promised to be with his people; but where is he? "There am I in the midst of them." Not up in the corner, but here in the midst of them is the Lord. He is the centre to which all saints gather. He is the sun in the heavens lighting all. He is the heart in the midst of the body giving life to all the members. "In the midst of them." Is not that delightful? The Lord Jesus Christ does not come into the assembly of His people to bless the minister only. No, you are all equally near in proportion to the grace of nearness you have received. He is in the midst of you, in the centre of all hearts. Like the centre of a wheel, from which all the spokes radiate, Jesus Christ is the middle of the company. Armies place the king or some great general in the heart of the host, in the place of honor and command; so, as our army marches to battle, our King is in the centre. The King is in the midst of the saints in all His glory, and His presence is their strength and their assurance of victory. Glory be to our present Lord: He is in the midst of us now.

And if He be in the midst of His people, what will He do? Why, he is there to sanction every little gathering of His people—to say to the twos and threes, "You are not Dissenters, for you have met with me. You are not Nonconformists: you are conformed to me, and I am one with you. You are the Established Church—you two or three. I have established you in my everlasting love; those that meet in in my name I have established them, and I have endowed them; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against them. I sanction your assemblies if you are my people." He is there to bless those who supplicate and adore. But, mark you, the text does not say this in so many words: and do not you say it, brother, next time you pray. Did I not hear you say, "Lord, Thou hast said, 'Where two or three are met together in my name, there am I in the midst of them, and that to bless them, and do them good'"? That last little bit is your own. That addition is not in the Bible, for it is not the Lord's way to say what never need be said. What other blessing do we want than Christ in the midst of us? If He is there, the blessing is not what he gives: but He himself is the blessing. It is not what He does: it is Himself. It is not even what He says: it is Himself. Oh, blessed be His name for what He gives, and blessed be His name for what He says: but still more blessed be His name because He himself loved us, and gave Himself for us, and now comes Himself into the midst of His people.

Now, dear friends, if Christ himself be in the midst of his people, He will bring us peace, just as He did when he dropped into the assembly of the eleven, the doors being shut. He stood and said, "Peace be unto you!" And when he had said that he showed them his hands and his side. It was himself, his own peace, and his own person which made his disciples glad. Then he said, "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you." This was his own commission from his own lips to his own servants, and having said this, he breathed on them and said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." Thus his own breath and his own Spirit coming upon them made them strong for service, and that is what he means when he says, "I am in the midst of them."

When Sir Thomas Abney was Lord Mayor of London, in the middle of the banquet which takes place on the first night, he disappeared for a quarter-of-an-hour, and when he came back, he said to the friends around him that he had been keeping a particular engagement with a most intimate friend, and so he had retired for awhile. That appointment was to have family prayer with his household in the Mansion House, and that gathering for prayer he would not have given up on any account whatever. Say to all other things, "You must stand back, I have a particular appointment; I must meet the Lord Jesus Christ with two or three of his people. He says that he will be there, and I should not like him to say, "Where is my servant? Where is my son? Where is my daughter? Are they absent when I am here?"

It is such a blessing to get to know the Lord Jesus personally. I heard the other day of a famous infidel, an agnostic,—that is, an ignoramus, a person who knows nothing,—and he went to a certain house to meet an elderly lady of considerable literary renown. He was told that she believed in the Word of God, and was a faithful follower of the Lord Jesus, so he thought that he would have a word with her before he went away. "Madam," said he, "I have been astonished to hear one thing of you. I hear that you believe in the Bible." "Yes, sir," she said, "every word of it." "And pray, Madam," he said, "however came you to believe in that book?" She replied, "One of the principal reasons that I have for believing in the Book is that I am intimately acquainted with the Author of it." That was a blessed answer. Faith gets to know Christ; and so, knowing Christ, and meeting him in the midst of his people, it becomes armed against all unbelief, and goes forth in its panoply conquering and to conquer. So will it be with you, beloved, if you meet the Well-beloved alone in your closets, and if you add to this frequent attendance at the holy assembly. I pray you, do not let us have to complain that one of you is away. Come always. My heart will rejoice if our meetings are filled with men and women who there seek communion with Jesus. Come, for Jesus is with us. Come, for it would be most unseemly for Him to be here and you away. I pray you come, and make this house like Heaven, which is thronged with shining ones who rejoice because Jesus is in their midst. Amen.

The Old Readjr Class.

BY WILL CARLETON.

I cannot tell you, Genevieve, how oft it comes to me—
That rusty yet old reading class in District Number Three.
That row of elocutionists who stood so straight in line,
And observed at standard literature with smile-be e design.
We didn't spare the energy in which our words were clad;
We gave the meaning of the text by all the light we had:
But still I fear the one who wrote the lines we read so free
Would answer serve recognized their work in District Number Three.

Outside the snow was smooth and clean—the Winter's th ck-laid dust;
The storm it made the windows speak at every sudden gust;
Bright sleigh-bells threw us pleasant words when travelers would pass;
The maple-trees a-long the road stood shivering in their a ss;
Beyond, the white-brow'd cottages were nestling co d and dumb,
And far away the mighty world seemed beckoning us to come—
The wondrous world, of which we conned what had be n and what might be,
In that old-fashioned reading class of District Number Three.

We took a hand at History—its altars, spires and flames—
And uniform y mispronounced the most important names;
We wandered through Biography, and gave our fancy p ay,
And with some subjects fell in love—"good only for one day!"
In Rhetoric and Philosophy we settled many a point,
And made what poems we assailed to creak at every joint;
And many authors that we love, you with me will agree,
Were first t mo introduced to us in District Number Three.

You recollect Susannah Smith, the teacher's sore distress,
Who never stopped at any pause—a sort of day express?
And timid young Sylvester Jones, of inconsistent sight,
Who stumbled on the easy words, and read the hard ones right?
And Jennie Green, whose doleful voice was always clothed in black?
And Samue. Rich, whose tones induced the plasterine all to crack?
And Andrew Tubbs, whose various mouths were quite a-know to see?
Alas! we cannot find them now in District Number Three.

And Jasper Jenckes, whose tears would flow at each pathetic word
(He's in the prize-fight business now, and hit's them hard, I've heard);
And Benj Bayne, whose every tone he murmured as in fear
(His tongue is not so timid now; he is an auctioneer);
And Lanty Wood, whose voice was just endeavoring hard to change,
And leap'd from hoarse to fiercely shrill with most surprising range;
Also his sist r Mary, so full of prudish glee.
Alas! they're both in higher schools than District Number Three.

So back these various voices come, though long the years have grown,
And sound uncommonly distinct through Memory's telephone;
And some are full of melody, and bring a sense of ease,
And some can smite the rock of time, and summon forth a tear;
But one sweet voice o mes back to me, whenever sad I grieve,
And sings a song, and that is yours, O peerless Genevieve!
It brings n up the olden times, and throws a smile at me—
A silver star amid the clouds of District Number Three.

GRANDMAMA'S STRATAGEM.

A large grey chatteau, partly in ruins, over whose broken walls dark-green ivy lovingly clung, mingled with the vivid crimson leaves of a trailing creeper.

At first one would scarcely have thought it inhabited, until they entered the sombre halls, ascended the carved staircase, and peeped into the barely-furnished rooms, which alone were occupied.

In one of these, lying on an ancient couch, drawn close to the open window, was an old white-haired lady, whose gentle face wore a look of deep sadness, while leaning caressingly against her were two young children.

The eldest, a boy of six, was clad in a gray linen suit, not unlike the costume of a French peasant, though Jean de Montfort was the only son of a ruined noble; the little girl, in her blue blouse and tiny lace cap, looked very quaint and sweet.

It was the time of war and tumult, when the Prussians were making France a scene of death and woe.

Little Lise, young as she was, knew that if the soldiers passed that way, and searched their home, it would mean imprisonment—perhaps death—for their beloved father, who with a small band of trusty followers, was concealed in an unused portion of the chateau.

It was this thought which made the kind and brave grandmother tremble and grow white when any unusual sound disturbed the peaceful tranquillity of the streets, this which brought the resolute look in Jean's brown eyes, the pensive expression on Lise's baby face.

"Grannie," Jean said suddenly, "do you think they will ever come here?"

"I pray not, my child. They are relentless in their demoniac fury; no one, young or old, is safe in their hands. I tremble to think what might happen should they come. Even if your dear father left the house he would be pursued and captured."

A sound of hurrying footsteps coming up the uncarpeted stairs roused their already awakened fears, and Jean flew towards the door, and it opened to admit their only maid.

"Marie, Marie, what is it? What new danger has arisen?" Madame de Montfort cried, clasping her hands in sudden agony.

"The soldiers—they are nearing here. I thought it best to warn you. If you wish to save master and those poor children, there is no time to lose," breathlessly.

The old lady bowed her head on her trembling hands, then, after a short silence, looked bravely at the tearful flushed face before her.

"It was good of you, to come here and warn us. I shall never be able to pay you except by gratitude. You know, Marie, where my son is hidden; go, and bring him here."

The girl dashed rapidly away, and after a few minutes' absence, returned with Raoul de Montfort.

"My son," Madame de Montfort said tremulously, "you must leave here as soon as possible. Those fearful Prussians are nearing the village, will be here before nightfall, and they must not find you."

"But you, mother, and my little ones? Do you think I could desert you, leave you to meet alone those cruel ruthless monsters?" he cried vehemently.

"Raoul, my boy, listen to me. I am too old and infirm, the children too young and innocent to bring their anger upon our heads. They surely cannot be so utterly heartless as to be without mercy for our helplessness! Go, Raoul, there are others beside yourself for whom you must not—those brave men who have served you so faithfully; leave us in perfect security. God will protect the innocent."

Reluctantly, yet impressed by his mother's words, the young man left the room, but soon returned to bid adieu to his loved family.

"God bless you, Raoul, may no harm befall you!" Madame murmured, crossing her hands over his bowed head as he knelt beside her.

After tenderly embracing her, Raoul turned towards his weeping children.

"Jean, dear little one, take care of grannie and Lise; I leave them to you," he whispered huskily, pressing the boy tightly to his breast, then drawing Lise into his arms, he kissed both children passionately, and with a warm hand-clasp to Marie, he quitted the room.

Then, and not till then, did Madame de Montfort turn her tear-dimmed eyes away.

"Marie," she said gently, "it is not safe for you to be here, child. Go home, or the soldiers will come before we are prepared."

"But, madame, do not send me from you. Let me stay with the chers petits; who knows what may happen if you are left alone."

"Fear nothing, Marie; God will protect us, and while my age and the children's innocence would perhaps save, they would torture you into telling them where my son is."

Marie sobbed afresh, but seeing how firm her mistress appeared, she regretfully obeyed, and after a tender farewell, left the three helpless beings alone.

For some time they sat in breathless silence.

Presently the sound of heavy trampling, of men and horses, broke the stillness, and they saw, with great alarm a band of dusty fierce-looking soldiers entering the grounds.

"There are here. Now for all our courage," the old lady murmured, shuddering. "Do not forget, my children, nothing must induce you to reveal the road your father has taken."

"Never fear grannie; I would rather die than cause the death of my dear father. If they ask me, I will tell them exactly the opposite direction," Jean answered bravely.

"No, no, Jean; that would not be the truth, and when the men found they had been deceived, they would return to be revenged on us."

"But what shall we do, grannie?"

"I have thought of something which will perhaps aid us. You know how to speak, if only a few words, in the old-fashioned broken dialect of our country; well, if these men should question me, I shall answer in a tongue which will be perfectly unintelligible to them; you must do the same."

"Yes, grannie, I remember a few words; I can repeat them always. So will Lise."

"Of course I will," that mite answered, in a tone of great importance. . "I shall say, 'Oh, Thou who art in heaven, help Thy innocent children'—that is what you taught us to say when we were little."

Madame de Montfort silently kissed her tiny grand-child's sweet face, then lay back quietly on her couch, as the door opened to admit their enemies, who came in angry and fierce, having been some time finding the occupied rooms.

Hardened and rough as they were, the noisiest and most hurried stopped on the threshold, struck by the picture before them.

Only the leader came forward, and asked with some respect:

"Where is your son, Raoul de Montfort? We are seeking him, and now for several days he has been stopping here."

Madame de Montfort gazed at him quietly, no sign of fear in her clear eyes.

"Oh, Thou who art in heaven, help the innocent!"

The man stared, he could not understand the strange tongue in which she spoke.

Repeating the question several times, he received only the same answer, until at last, enraged, he dragged terrified Jean to him.

"You, at least, must know how to speak. Tell me at once, which way has your father gone?"

Jean repeated distinctly the same words his grandmother had bidden him, nor would either he or Lise, though threatened with glittering sabres, give any other response.

"It is no use. I suppose they cannot really understand, and it is impossible for me to make out a word of their gibberish!" the captain exclaimed at length, tired of his questioning.

War is finished now; Jean and Lise are getting old; but neither will forget the way when, by their brave defiance of the enemy, they were able to save their loved father from, perhaps, death.

Important and Wonderful, If True.

"The draw plates, by means of which these fine wires are made, are sapphires and rubies. You may fancy for yourselves how extremely delicate must be the work of making holes of such exceeding smallness to accurate gauge, too, in such very hard stones. But, delicate as is the work of boring the holes, there is something still more delicate in the processes that produce such fine wire as this. That something is the filing of a long point on the wire to enable the poking of the end of it through the draw plates so it can be caught by the nippers. Imagine yourself filing a long, tapering point on the end of a wire only one eighteen-hundredth of an inch in diameter in order to get it through a drawplate that will bring it down to one two-thousandth. I cannot say positively what uses this very thin wire is put to, but something in surgery, I believe, either for fastening together pieces of bone or for operations. A newly invented instrument has been described to me, which, if it does what is affirmed, is one of the greatest and most wonderful discoveries of modern science. A very thin platinum wire loop, brought to incandescence by the current from a battery, which, though of great power, is so small that it hangs from the lapel of the operator's coat, is used instead of the knife, for excisions and certain amputations. It sears as it cuts, prevents the loss of blood, and is absolutely painless, which is the most astonishing thing about it. I am assured that a large tumor has been cut from a child in this manner, and the child laughed while the operation was being performed, and that without any anæsthetic having been administered."—Platinum Wire-Maker in Interview.

A Good Season for Widows.

Newspaper society gossip affirms that this is pre-eminently the season for young widows. The fashionable watering places are showing a better, brighter and gayer number of bereaved consorts than for many years. In their tasteful costumes of gauzy black materials, and artistic combinations of black and white, their charming little rice straw bonnets with fluffy knots of Brussels net, or black straw pokes tied under the chin, with enamaring folds or white illusion, and their comfortable preference for retired, flirtation piazza corners, they are completely distancing in the way of masculine attentions the giddy girls of white flannel, lawn tennis, canvas shoe and calloused hand affections.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

MEERSCHAUM PIPES.

Some of the Troubles That Smokers Have in Coloring Their Pet Pipes.

"Smokers are continually writing to me to ask how to take care of their meerschaum pipes," said a dealer of Fulton street. "From that I infer that not one half of the owners of meerschaum pipes know how to handle them. The most common complaint is that their meerschaum will not turn from the natural yellowish-white color to a rich brown, even after the smokers have smoked themselves into the color of a dried mummy in the effort. If the pipe is of good meerschaum there is no reason why it should not take color. If it does not do so, then the fault lies with the smoker. In what way? Why, the purchaser of a new meerschaum pipe, worth perhaps $50, thinks night and day about the toy, and is so anxious to color it that he overdoes it. He finds that he has 'burned' his pipe, as he expresses it. To explain why you can spoil a pipe in this way, you must understand how the meerschaum is prepared. After the artist has finished cutting the design and has shaped the bowl, the finished pipe is boiled in wax. Why in wax? Because the wax penetrates the pores for a short distance beneath the surface and serves to keep the coloring matter in the pipe. The coloring matter is the oil of tobacco, not nicotine as many erroneously suppose, and it sinks into the meerschaum, which is simply a very fine, porous clay, and is stopped by the wax before it is driven out at the outer surface by the heat inside. If it were were not for the wax the coloring matter would pass out and get rubbed off, and the pipe would never be colored. A glazing of glass would do as well as wax, but wax is the cheapest material that has been found for this purpose. Now, when over-anxious smokers try to hurry the process of coloring by smoking pipeful after pipeful of tobacco the wax is driven out, leaving the pipe raw and dry. The nearer to the top of the bowl the wax is kept the finer it will look when colored. If this was more generally known you would not see so many meerschaum pipes with a dirty, light-yellow ring around the top, where the oil has been forced out by over-smoking. The smoker should take long, slow pulls at the pipe, and after one pipeful is exhausted the pipe should be laid down to cool off before it is filled again."

"It seems to be an art with very little fun in it, this coloring a meerschaum pipe."

"Smoke temperately, my boy, as you should do everything else, and there's no trouble or disappointment following." Next to coloring a pipe, I have most complaints about finding the pipe broken when no one has been using it. If smokers would take care not to take their pipes while they are smoking from a warm room into a cold room, or out of doors in winter, they would not find their pipes broken so often. Another thing, the article should not be laid on a marble mantel or other cold substance immediately after smoking. Fine meerschaum with delicate carvings are sure to crack. The reason is that when heated the pipe expands, and, in too suddenly contracting, it snaps."

"It seems that a meerschaum pipe needs as much attention as a baby."

"That's a mistake. You can take too much care of it. Many smokers begin by making a close cover of chamois leather to fit the pipe, so that they will not have to handle the bowl. After they have smoked for a while, and are curious to see how the coloring is going on, they take off the chamois skin covering, and behold, the pipe is covered with blotches, and it is ruined. The chamois skin has absorbed the wax while the pipe was hot. It is dangerous to put any covering on the bowl."

"Must the bowl never be touched?"

"Not while the pipe is hot. Then the wax on the out side is disturbed, and if there is perspiration on the fingers a gray spot appears wherever the bowl is touched. As to the effect of perspiration on the bowl, I have two customers who cannot keep a pipe colored. It turns an ashy gray. I have even had bowls colored for them, but it was just the same. In a few months they had turned the same color. In all my experience I have heard of only those two whose pipes served them such a trick."—New York Sun.

Swordsmen of the Deep.

Imagine whales fencing with one another for amusement!

It seems as if such a thing could not be; and yet there are whales of a certain species which not only fence with one another, but use their teeth for swords.

It is the narwhal that fences. One of the teeth of the male narwhal always grows through the upper lip and stands out like a spear, straight in front of the animal.

It seems as if all the material that should have gone to fill the narwhal's mouth with teeth had gone to the one tooth that grows out through the lip; for sometimes this tooth is eight feet long. The animal itself, from head to tail, is seldom more than sixteen feet in length.

Of what use such an enormous tooth is to the narwhal no one knows. Some persons say it is used for spearing fish; others, that its use is to stir up the mud in the bottom of the ocean in order to scare out the fish that may be hiding there; and one man says the tooth is for the purpose of breaking holes in the ice in winter; for the narwhal, like all whales, is obliged to come to the surface at intervals to breathe.

Whatever the tooth is intended to be used for, it is certain that when the narwhal wishes to play it finds another narwhal of a like mind, and away they charge at each other till the long tooth swords clash together.

They are active as well as frolicsome and sailors tell of seeing them cross swords in this way, thrusting and parrying, and rolling and darting about with marvelous agility and grace.

The narwhal is light gray in color, and covered with black spots. For a great many reasons it is valued by the Greenlanders. It furnishes a very fine quality of oil, its flesh is used for food, and its skin, made into a jelly, and called Mattak, is considered a dainty too choice for ordinary occasions.

This "swordsman of the deep," as I have called him, is a warm-blooded animal, and must not be confounded with the saw-fish or the sword-fish, both of which are entirely different from the narwhal.—John R. Coryell, in St. Nicholas for September.

Peterborough Examiner.

PETERBOROUGH, JAN. 29, 1885.

Thanks.

About three weeks ago we inclosed, in that issue of THE EXAMINER, to each subscriber, envelopes and blanks for remittances. We have now to return thanks for the prompt and liberal manner in which they have been made use of. Over five hundred subscribers have remitted for renewal of subscription, many of them anticipating, by weeks or months, the expiry of their subscription. To all these we return our thanks; but we have still to request many more of our subscribers to make use of the blanks and envelopes, and remit the amount required for renewal. To the class that composes the subscribers to the EXAMINER, the small amount of $1.00 is no obstacle to paying up. To each individual subscriber it is only a trifling sum, but in the aggregate it represents a considerable amount to us. We are sure we have only to call the attention of those who have omitted to renew, to the matter, to insure a prompt remittance.

South Renfrew.

The by-election held in South Renfrew on Tuesday resulted in the triumphant return of Dr. Dowling, the Reform candidate, by the overwhelming majority of 490. The persecution with which the Tories have followed Dr. Dowling for his share in exposing the iniquitous Tory bribery plot of last session, has done so much to establish their guilt that the electors of South Renfrew have emphatically denounced the party of plotters and given Dr. Dowling a majority nearly twice as large as at his second election which was three times larger than that at his first election. The result is not only an endorsation of the policy of the Ontario Administration, but is a stinging rebuke to the band of Ontario factionists, called an opposition, and also the snub direct to the Dominion Government, who applied all the means at their disposal to defeat the Reform candidate. Dr. Dowling's election is a bitter pill to the Conservatives, because it shows that popular opinion is steadily growing in favor of the Reform Government of Ontario.

South Monaghan.

The attention which THE EXAMINER has drawn to the matter of closer commercial relations with the township of South Monaghan and the desirability of improving the means of communication between that township and Peterborough has had at least one effect. The towns of Cobourg and Port Hope have begun to move in the matter, and are anxiously considering the possibility of making the Port Hope and Rice Lake gravel road free of toll. If they succeed in this they seem to think that the comparative isolation which South Monaghan labors under, in default of good access to market towns, will be removed to an extent that will make them content with a free road to Port Hope. These facts make it so much more incumbent on Peterborough to be on the alert, and to leave no reasonable means untried to secure the important trade of South Monaghan. The matter being one of business importance, it is to be hoped that it will be gone about in a business way. The time for consideration is past and the hour for action has come.

Mr. R. C. Strickland, Warden.

On Tuesday last Mr. Roland C. Strickland, reeve of Lakefield, was elected Warden of the County of Peterborough for the year 1885. Mr. Strickland is a comparatively young man, having been born in Lakefield in 1844. He is the seventh son of the late Col. Strickland. He is, however, well qualified by experience for the duties of Warden, for he has been a member of the County Council for six years, representing Lakefield that length of time. He also represented Douro as councillor for two years, besides having the benefit of the municipal experience of his father, who was reeve of Douro for some time. The new Warden's business habits, acquired in the joint management of the extensive lumbering business of Messrs. R. & G. Strickland, should be an additional element of fitness for his new duties. We congratulate Mr. Strickland on his selection as Warden, and have no doubt that he will, while becomingly maintaining the dignity of the office, carefully guard the interests of the county thus committed to his care.

The Dynamite Outrages.

There is something simply diabolical in the fiendish attempt made on Saturday last to blow up the British Houses of Parliament and the tower of London. It is the most successful of a series of such attempts following in quick succession. The fiendish nature of the work is shown by the fact that innocent persons are involved in the destruction that ensues. If the object is a political one referring to Ireland, the plans employed will certainly defeat the object. Such cowardly and fiendish means will certainly harden the British authorities, and many Englishmen who might sympathize with Ireland's political condition, will, by such means be turned into active enemies. Even respectable Irishmen, who are working hard for the amelioration of Ireland's condition, will hesitate before helping to promote a movement that will throw Ireland into the hands of so bloodthirsty and cowardly a gang of miscreants. It is more than likely that the national party in Ireland are innocent in this matter. The work is more probably that of irresponsible rascals who have their headquarters in some foreign country, and are acting independently and out of pure wickedness. We know how the United States has sheltered O'Donovan Rossa and his gang; and, while the American Government is greatly to blame for allowing such fiendish plots to be laid against a friendly power, it is pleasant to notice that they have at last been aroused to action. A bill has been introduced into the United States Senate with a view of preventing the operations in that country of the dynamite rascals.

Editorial Notes.

A writer in the Mail asserts that the statistics of the Ontario Education Department are incorrect, and attempts to prove it by the Census Returns! This is richness—something like proving by Bob Ingersoll's lectures that the Bible is incorrect.

When Tory papers are howling over the alleged Reform corruption in Lennox, it may be well to remind them of what they, apparently, have forgotten: that the head of their party, Sir John, was unseated in this same Lennox for corruption and bribery, and only escaped personal disqualification by the skin of his teeth.

The appeal against Judge Cameron's remarkable decision in the West Northumberland election case is set down for hearing at the February sittings of the Supreme Court at Ottawa. George Guillet, the sitting member is respondent. J. J. McLaren, Q.C., takes the petitioner's brief held by the late Mr. Bethune.

Dr. Orton, M.P., is a servant of the C.P.R.—superintendent of the medical staff at the Rocky Mountain section. It is announced that Dr. Orton is returning eastward to attend to his Parliamentary duties. Is Dr. Orton an exception to the truth of the Divine Nazarene's assertion that "no man can serve two masters"? Can he at the same time honestly serve his constituents and the C.P.R.

The Ontario Government has, we understand, decided not to interfere with the Dominion licencees during the term of the licenses they now hold and which expire on May 1st next, so long as they sell within the legal hours and conform to the ordinary laws respecting licensed houses. The Government act wisely in not making these holders of illegal licenses martyrs, especially as in three or four months longer the licenses have to run, the amount of injury done cannot be great.

The Port Hope Times takes us to task, and accuses us of making a "misstatement" in recording the recent election of Mr. Pruyn, "who was unseated for bribery by agents." If the Times and the reader will consult the report of the third day's proceedings of the trial of the Lennox election petition it will be seen that the judge decided that Mr. Pruyn had a majority of the votes, and, as he claimed the seat, he must have had the seat; but his lordship also decided that bribery by agents of Mr. Pruyn had been established sufficient to affect his status, and as there was a new election, it is not unfair to infer that Mr. Pruyn was unseated. If we made a "misstatement," we are in excellent company, for Hon. Mr. Justice Armour practically made the same statement.

CUPID'S DOINGS.

It appears to us that both old and young are getting the marriage fever in the vicinity of Springville; at least there are three marriages to record last week.

On the 20th instant Mr. George May, of Peterborough, was married to Miss Addie McCall, of Springville. We compliment Mr. May on his choice, and hope their voyage through life MAY be both happy and prosperous.

Mr. Joseph Best, of Mount Pleasant, has taken unto himself a helpmate in the person of Miss F. Shields. We pause here to congratulate the happy-mated couple, and sincerely hope they may live to spend many happy years in their new home.

PERSONAL.

Mr. John Miller, sr., of Otonabee, has been appointed a Justice of the Peace, and has taken the oath of office.

At the annual meeting of the Ontario Poultry Association Mr. John McClelland was elected Second Vice-President.

Mr. James Guillett, well known in Peterborough, died at his home in Cobourg last Saturday. The cause of death was consumption of the lungs.

While in town on Sunday Rev. Mr. Longley was the guest of Mr. A. L. Davis, and Rev. Dr. Sutherland of Mr. Thomas Bradburn.

Mr. J. Morley Campbell, son of Mr. John Campbell, and heretofore secretary and short-hand writer in the office of Mr. Riddell, Superintendent of the Midland Division of the Grand Trunk, has been promoted, at an increased salary, to the office of Mr. J. Stephenson, General Superintendent, Montreal. He left for the city on Tuesday evening.

A Danger Threatened.

Judging from the past evidences of rapacity on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway company, there is reason to fear that it will, at the coming session of Parliament, make another demand similar to the thirty million grab at the last session. And judging from the recklessness shown by the Dominion Government, there is reason to fear that a demand, if made, may be complied with. Therefore the following article from the Hamilton Times, headed "Look out for Another Raid," will be read with interest:

"Investors in Canadian railways, of whom every Canadian taxpayer, willing or unwilling, is one, have learned to distrust the Canadian Pacific Syndicate and its statements. The distrust is never more justifiable than at those times when the head men of the Syndicate boast that their property is doing well and earning dividends. A succession of similar boastings preceded the demand upon Parliament for the $30,000,000 loan, or "steal," one year ago, and now that Parliament is soon to meet it is suspicious that bulletins describing the unprecedented prosperity of the C. P. R. appear in the Government organs. The Montreal Gazette and the Toronto Mail parade the statement of Manager Van Horne, that the net earnings of the C. P. R. for the months of September, October and November were $806,651. What danger, they ask, can there be of the road not earning large dividends in the future, when its receipts so far exceed its working expenses at this early day?

The C. P. R. traffic returns show receipts of $3,320,574 up to August 31st, 1884; receipts of $2,029,061 for the next 3 months, and $500,000 for the last month in the year, making total gross receipts of $5,849,655 for 1884, against $5,283,565 for 1883. The mileage at the end of 1883 was 1,931, and at the end of 1884 it was 2,794, an increase of 863 miles. The increase in gross receipts was 17 per cent., and the increase of mileage was 44 per cent., which does not show an addition to the earning power in comparison with the working expenses. For some reason Mr. Van Horne and the Government organs select three months in which to show how well the road is doing. Those are the months of September, October and November, and the earnings of those three months are 35 per cent of the whole year's earnings. It is said that the net earnings are $805,651, which would leave about 60 per cent. of the gross earnings for operating expenses. The trouble with a statement of this kind is to find out how much consists of tangible earnings, and how much depends upon the system of bookkeeping. The Canadian Pacific officials state that they have been spending two million dollars a month upon construction, and that they have had one army of navvies employed north of Lake Superior and another army in the Rocky Mountains. It is easy in three months, when getting ready for the winter campaign, to pay out of six millions a considerable sum for all the Company's material carried at full tariff rates, and for the expenses of moving the Company's servants, as well as the expenses of working the line near the Rocky Mountains, which can still be regarded as under construction. We know that when Mr. Stephen issued his circular of Dec. 29th, 1883, containing the statement that the road's earnings for 18 3 amounted to 5 and a quarter million dollars, a deduction of $1,274,000 had to be made for "Company's charges for transportation of construction material and supplies," leaving the actual gross receipts at $4,000,000. In the year 1884 more supplies had to be hauled than in 1883, and the supplies had to be hauled longer distances to reach the points where work was in progress. It will be strange, indeed, if this item did not reach $1,500,000 in 1884, thus reducing the gross receipts to $4,349,655.

Looking back to the three months, September, October and November, which were selected as the most favourable upon which to found a record, it is proper to deduct $500,000 from the gross earnings to represent the paper earnings for carrying the company's supplies and materials. The net revenue will then be $800,000 against $1,500,000 gross revenue, an allowance of 47 per cent. for working expenses. That ratio for working expenses in the fall and winter months is something unique in the history of Canadian railways. The story is meant for the marines.

With 1,931 miles the Canadian Pacific made gross earnings of $5,283,565 in 1883, an average of $2,736 per mile per year. In 1884, with 2,794 miles, and gross earnings of $5,849,655, the average was $2,090 per mile per year, or would be that if the whole mileage had been in use the whole year. The Intercolonial earned $2,756 per mile in the year ending June 30th, 1884, and the Grand Trunk, running through a well settled country, earned $6,630 per mile. The Intercolonial was a burden upon the Government, and the Grand Trunk had very little for dividends. What folly it is, then, to believe that the Canadian Pacific can pay dividends with its small earnings and long mileage. What folly it was to run the line so rapidly through an uninhabited country!

Mr. Van Horne's statements are too loose and general for any dependence to be placed upon them. It does not stand to reason that the Canadian Pacific should pay a profit at this stage of its history. The Grand Trunk ran through a district long settled; the climate with which it had to contend was certainly favorable in comparison with the climate north of Lake Superior, and across the Rocky Mountains, and the fuel account was lower in wooded Ontario than it ever can be in prairie Manitoba, yet the Grand Trunk did not earn its working expenses for many years. The preference stocks that now block the way and prevent the possibility of dividends on the common stock represent nothing else but paper to cover deficits in the early days of the road, when working expenses exceeded gross receipts. The Canadian Pacific extends through 1,500 miles where there are few inhabitants, and in two-thirds of that distance there can never be population enough to supply any appreciable local traffic. Large portions of the road can never pay running expenses, and it was poor economy to build those portions before it became obligatory to do so.

The story about net earnings of $805,651 in three months is put forward to discredit the statement of Mr. Sanford Fleming that the working expenses of the Canadian Pacific would for some years exceed the receipts. The evident trick in the Company's statement, taken with other indications, awakens the suspicion that Messrs. Stephen & Co. are preparing for another raid upon the treasury. The first demand will probably be the release of the lien for the $30,000,000 loan. But who would lend money on the security of the road even then? Investors need something more than mere newspaper statements that the road is making a profit. Let Mr. Van Horne show officially that there is a profit on any portion of the line, giving the earnings from the trade of the country, and not from the carriage of the Company's construction supplies. Let him give the statistics of train mileage. Let the Government then employ a trustworthy man of knowledge and experience to verify the figures, or have them sworn to by those responsible for their preparation. The country needs some guarantee that Parliament shall not have some scheme sprung upon it like, in its far-reaching consequences, the scheme that was carried through last session with so much damage to the country. The Government ought not to give more subsidies, ought not to release any existing securities, and ought not to guarantee any Canadian Pacific bonds. It is folly to throw good money after bad.

Additional evidence that the road is not likely to be a first-class security for the thirty millions already advanced, not to dream of a similar sum at the coming session, is the inconceivably unsuitable nature of the route selected through the Rocky Mountains. Not only is this portion of the line liable to snow storms blocking the road, but immense avalanches and glaciers form elements that will not only directly increase the cost of maintenance of the road, but render it unsafe to travel, and thus diminish the probable earnings from passenger traffic. All the information attainable points to the fact that not only the thirty millions advanced, but any further advance to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, will not be a loan but a gift. Plunged in debt, as the country is, through the unreflecting extravagance of the present Tory Government, is it reasonable to suppose that Canada can go much more deeply in debt without becoming bankrupt?

DYNAMITE DIABOLISM.

British House of Commons Shattered—The Tower of London Shaken—Innocent Visitors Injured.

An alarming explosion took place on Saturday afternoon in the Houses of Parliament London. It occurred close to the House of Lords, near Westminister Hall. The force of the shock was tremendous and was felt at a great distance. A second explosion occurred about three minutes after the first, the second time being in the House of Commons. Saturday being the usual visiting day at the House of Parliament, the building contained a large number of sight-seers.

It has been ascertained that a large quantity of explosive matter had been placed inside the great ornamental gates leading to the crypt under Westminister Hall. These gates were blown clear off the hinges and thrown to the ground. All the windows on the north and south sides of the immense building were blown to atoms. The concussion shook down from the grand oak roof of the hall the accumulated soot of centuries. This in its downward movement made a dense cloud. Four persons were badly injured, including two policemen, who were fatally wounded. When the explosion occurred in the hall over a hundred persons were in the Commons, and they rushing out to see what was the matter escaped the second explosion and saved their lives. A women who was visiting Westminister Hall at the time of the outrage says she was descending the stairs leading to the crypt when she saw what appeared to b a burning dress. Volumes of smoke were arising from the burning article. She then saw a constable pick up the article and immediately throw it from him. As soon as the thing struck the ground it exploded with frightful report.

Remarkable force was shown by the explosion in a downward direction. Holes were scooped in the ground large enough to hold a man. Into one of the holes so formed Constable Cox was violently thrown, and from it was extricated in a bruised and battered condition. Two other policemen near the scene of the explosion were not so seriously hurt, but they were thoroughly stunned by the concussion.

Another explosion occurred about the same time at the tower of London. The attack was made on a portion of the building known as the White tower, the keep of the tower of London. It was fairly filled with visitors, and most, if not all, of those hurt were moving about at the time of the explosion, while the tower was almost completely wrecked by the force of the explosion. The roof was blown clear off the structure. All the persons known to have been injured were visitors. The police, the moment they realized the nature of the explosion, effectually barred all egress from the tower and grounds, and subjected those going out to a strict examination.

THE DAMAGE DONE.

The prevalent belief is that the destructive agent was conveyed into the House of Commons by some Saturday visitor. Fuller investigation shows the extent of the damage is much greater than at first supposed. The western extremity of the House is a total wreck. There is no doubt but that the explosive was placed under the peers' gallery on the Government side of the House. All the woodwork in that part of the building was shattered, and a wide hole made in the floor. The gallery was displaced, and even the solid stonework of the door-ways either pulverised or shifted from position. Every pane of glass in the House was smashed to atoms. The gallery benches were overturned and broken. The gallery was generally dismantled. A lady visiting the House of Commons at the time of the outrage was seriously injured. Immense damage was done in the lobby. The masonry, decorations and sculpture were utterly destroyed. The place is described as literally blown to pieces. The shock was felt in Pall Mall, and persons in the vicinity say the very earth shook. Four persons were badly injured, including two policemen, fatally wounded.

The glass roof of the House of Commons was completely shattered. The clock in the House stopped at precisely 2:13 p. m. A heavy beam which formed one of the supports to the gallery was projected into the Speaker's chair, seriously injuring it. Gladstone's seat was torn to pieces. A close inspection of the Parliament Buildings showed that excepting the beautiful window overlooking the staircases at the south end of Westminister Hall, scarcely a pane of glass escaped destruction. The foundations of the building were badly shaken. The roof of the crypt, in spite of its massive strength, was greatly damaged, rifts being visible here and there. About twenty persons were injured more or less seriously by the explosion, two it is feared fatally.

The latest information places the head quarters of the dynamite gang in France.

The excitment over Saturday's explosions still continues in London. The police are active in their investigations, and have arrested an Irish-American named Cunningham, whom they believe they can connect more or less directly with the plot. The total damage done will amount to $70,000.

THE DEMOCRATIC PRINCIPLE.

The division of wealth, not by communistic law, but by those happy conditions which prevail here, the repudiation from the statute book, and from those statutes which are enshrined in the hearts of the people of the law of primogeniture; the distribution, as a rule, of a man's wealth equally amongst the children: the abolition—which I am radical enough to advocate—of the law of entail:

A WIDELY DIFFUSED EDUCATION;

an intermingling of the people; the effacement, as far as we can efface them, of class distinctions in our midst—all these things are points to which we should look carefully, and which true Liberals, anxious for the success of the democratic principal, should seek to achieve. I attribute the greatest importance to the intermingling of the people. I feel that we ought to be, as I have said, an educated people, and being educated, readers of books and newspapers, capable of forming and expressing an opinion, we ought to feel our common citizenship the strongest tie that binds us, from the man who happens to be wealthy to the man who happens to be poor. I hope that in this Young Men's Liberal Club this example is set, and that the Club will be a common meeting ground where the young mechanic, the young student, the young clerk, and other classes in our community, possessing that happy gift of youth which has fled from me, may meet together as young citizens of Canada, and on an equal footing as young Liberals and citizens, learning to respect, esteem, and admire one another, no matter what the texture of the cloth in the coat, recognising the identity of the country and the identity of interest. (Loud applause.) What should the democracy believe with reference to the great principles of freedom? I have no new-fangled doctrine to present to you, but I want you to remember there are three great freedoms which have been wrested from unwilling hands in olden time, and which are preserved to us—freedom of opinion, the most valuable of all, freedom of person, and freedom of property—a well-ordered liberty, the right to do what I will with mine own, but not the right to use it as to hurt my neighbour. What does freedom of property embrace? It embraces, as one of its most essential elements, the right to exchange that property which I have (whether it be mine by the labour of my hands or the fruits of my accumulated labour or of that of those who preceded me) for what I want. (Applause). The right to deal with whom, for what, and where I please. (Applause.) And here we get between the parties of this country. We Liberals are charged, in reference to our fiscal policy, with neglect of the interests of labor, and neglect of the interests of capital. If you were to believe that personage to whom you, Sir, have alluded,—(laughter)—you would suppose that we were insane enough to seek to persuade the people to a policy of destruction, as I have said, of the interests of labor on the one hand and of capital on the other. I have no hesitation in saying to you that there is one test which I have always sought to apply when I have desired to consider what the material condition of a country was, and that test was—What is the material condition of the lowest class of honest labor in that country? If I find the lowest class so fairly paid that there is enough for the support of a man and of those dependent upon him, and some to lay by for a rainy day, I know that I need inquire no further—(applause)—because I know that all above that grade must be well off, unless you establish a false scale of civilization, which I am disposed to call luxury. You may in the effort to "keep up appearances," as it is called, have a great deal of genteel misery. (Renewed applause.) I have not much sympathy with that. It is from the point of view of the standard I have just shown you that I have always considered the fiscal and tariff policy of this Administration. I want to lay before you a few of the points on which I think that policy wholly indefensible. It is a good time to do it, and I will give you reasons from the adversary as well as from the friend. They are anxious that we should not discuss this matter now. They want us to discuss Imperial Federation, Independence, Annexation, Commercial Treaties, anything at all except the condition of the country. (Laughter and applause.) A little while ago they wanted us to talk of nothing else but the condition of the country. (Renewed laughter.) They wanted to put us down by pointing to what they said was prosperity. They said, There's no use arguing why or how, are you not well off? Would you not be fools to make a change? To-day they would be only too glad to draw any red herring across the trail. (Applause.) They ask us then, Show us your policy. We have had always an affirmative as well as a negative policy—not only as to the tariff but also as to that other great question, the railway and North-West Administration. And to-day we are quite ready to continue that discussion and to let it be judged by the light of events, whether the promises they made, the professions to which they gave utterance, the views they expressed and to which they induced the people to assent, are sound, and whether they have been verified or falsified by events.

I HAVE OBJECTED TO THE POLICY,

first of all, in a leading point, that of specific duties. I objected to that from the very point of view I mentioned a while ago, the incidence of the tariff upon the poor and the rich, and I have pointed out from many a platform what the effect of a specific as contrasted with an ad valorem duty is, that it compels the poor man out of his poverty to pay more than the rich man out of his wealth. But it is not necessary for me to do so this evening, because sometimes, fortunately for us, our Ministers visit England, and whether the ocean has some effect in making them forget what they have said on this side of the water, I know not, but they give utterance to truths on which they are silent on this side. I am to-night prepared to establish my proposition, with reference to the injustice of specific duties, from the mouth of the Finance Minister. (Hear, hear.) He was talking in England to some merchants who were anxious, from their point of view, that he should establish specific duties on our own goods. This is what he said:—"They had adopted specific duties wherever it was possible; but where there was a difference in the value of the article, such as in the case of cotton, where there were the cheaper and the coarser kinds, anything where there was great difference of value, if they charged so much upon the pound they were liable to the accusation that they were imposing the same charges upon the poor man using a cheap article as upon the rich man who could afford a dearer article." The murder is out. (Great laughter and applause.) That would be heresy on this side of the water, but it is logic, good sense and truth in England. The Liberal party objected also to the incidence of the tariff upon prime necessaries of life. We objected, amongst other things to the coal and breadstuffs duties, because they were both necessaries of life and that one of them was in one sense directly, and flour also, for that matter, was a raw material of manufacture, that these taxes bore heavily and unjustly upon the poorer classes. I am not going to argue that out, for again I shall read you a short passage which proves my case. It is the language of a Minister:—"If it had been the object to devise a tariff that would set one Province against another that would create and perpetuate sectional jealousies and antipathies, the Government had certainly succeeded. Breadstuffs were to be taxed to please the people of Ontario, but he believed it was a great injustice to the agriculturists of Ontario to suppose that they were prepared to accept such a tariff, or that it would be protection to them. The market where their surplus product was disposed of fixed the price of the whole, and duty could not be of any positive advantage so far as the price of their breadstuffs was concerned. Their duty would be a great obstruction to trade all throughout the country, which should, in accordance with the true principles of commerce, be left as unrestricted as possible. Not only would the tariff be worthless to the people of Ontario, but it would be most burdensome to other sections—to fishermen and the great masses of people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, as well as of Quebec, for it is a well known fact that large quantities of breadstuffs are yearly taken into the latter Province from the United States. Then, as part of this great 'National Policy,' a duty was imposed on foreign coal as a means of propitiating the people of Nova Scotia. Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Quebec were taxed to satisfy Ontario; Quebec, Ontario and New Brunswick were to be burthened to please a minority in Nova Scotia. Nothing could be more calculated to create dissension and to disturb the harmonious working of Confederation than such legislation." Would you not have thought I was reading from the speech of some Liberal? But it was really a speech of Sir David Macpherson. (Loud applause and laughter.) But it was made a good while ago. (Renewed laughter.) It was made when he was an independent member.

HE ROASTED MUCH

of his independence then, and latter on he said he sat in the Senate not as a party man but to speak the views he conscientiously held. He spoke the truth, as I believe, and he spoke his independent convictions, as I presume, and they remain on record, fortunately for us and unfortunately for him. (Laughter and applause.) He has changed his place since then—and he has changed his opinions. (Applause.) It is for you to judge whether you will pay most respect to the changed opinions of the office-holder or to the independent opinions of the Senator, I agreed with him when he made the speech, I agree with him to-day, but I differ altogether from the Minister of the Interior. We have objected, Mr. Chairman, to the rate of taxation. They told us that they were going to give us a readjustment and not an increase of the tariff. They were simply going to adjust the burdens to the strength of the back. What has happened? In 1877 you used according to the returns, $96,300,000 worth of goods imported. But I have to take off a considerable number of millions, because the accounts were kept in a different way from what they are to-day, and certain imports are not to be counted. It tells against me, but we must be fair. The net amount of goods imported for use was about $91,600,000. On that you paid duty in round numbers of 12½ millions. That is between 13 and 14 per cent for everything, free and dutiable, you used within the year. In 1881 you also used $91,600,000 of goods—the same value. How much duty did you pay under this tariff, which was to be a readjustment, and not an increase? Eighteen and a half millions; about 20 1-5 per cent., or about fifty per cent. of an increase. (Applause.) For every dollar you paid in 1877, on the same value of goods you paid $1.50 in 1883.

Mr JAMES FRENCH—Those goods were specially for the rich.

Mr. Blake—And so neither you nor I bought any of them. (Laughter and applause.) We objected to the gross amount of the taxes also, because it was said the gross amount was not to be increased. We had been told that it required about thirteen millions from customs, and five millions from excise to carry on the affairs of the Dominion. Take the three years 1876-7-8 under the Mackenzie administration. The aggregate collections by customs were $38,150,000. In 1881-2-3, under the present Government, the customs collections were $63,000,000, an excess of almost twenty-five millions, or nearly two-thirds more in the latter than in the form three years. (Cheers.) We objected to the surplus. It was one of the grounds of glorification with the Ministers for two or three years. They are not talking so much about it now, because there is not so much of it. (Laughter.) It was not so in old days. I have often pointed to a statement of Sir Charles Tupper, made when Sir Richard Cartwright estimated a modest surplus of half a million dollars. Sir Charles rose and in indignant terms denounced him for proposing to take more from the people than he expected to spend. It was of no use for Sir Richard to say that he was not sure that he would be able to keep the expenditure down as low as he had estimated, and that half a million was not an unreasonable margin to ask on the large transactions of the Dominion. Sir Charles replied that he should do as they had done, and as the Government in England had done—lower the taxation so that there should be no surplus. Such was the patriotic Sir Charles, when in opposition talking about a surplus, which, I am sorry to say was not realized, of half a million. The Government of which he was a member actually collected surpluses in 1881-2-3 of $17,400,000. I agreed with Sir Charles in principle in 1875, though he was pushing the principle too far to refuse to allow the Finance Minister a margin of half a million. When you find us agree it may be a reason for doubting us both. (Laughter and applause.) But I am of the same opinion, while Sir Charles has changed. (Applause.) What did the First Minister say during the election of 1882? He said: "I never knew a man grow too rich to please himself, and it is the same with a country; in fact, my belief about surpluses is the same as the old squaw's about whisky. She said a little too much was just enough." (Laughter.) How does a man grow rich? By saving his money, not by spending it. Does the country grow rich by having a large quantity of money in the treasury taken from your pockets and mine? (Applause.) It is a simple process to call upon you to pay money into the treasury, and he says the country can't grow too rich—in that particular way. (Applause.) I say the more you put into the treasury in that way the poorer you make the country. (Great applause.) The national wealth is that in

THE POCKETS OF THE PEOPLE.

(Applause.) The collecting of a surplus is a great evil. It leads to extravagance. (Applause.) It takes away means which in a country like ours we require to carry on the business of the country. (Cheers.) One of our great difficulties is the high rate of interest, and when the Government takes away money at four per cent. which is required to carry on the business of the country, and which has to be replaced by money borrowed from the banks at seven or eight per cent., an additional injury results. By the time the consumer had paid for this surplus it cost about thirty millions. For, mark you, the amount in the treasury does not gauge the loss to the people. The money is paid to the Customs by the importer. He must charge a profit on the whole cost of the goods, including the Customs duties. The retailer pays that and he also charges his profit on the whole amount of the goods, including the amount the wholesaler paid, and the profit upon it, so that by the time the goods reached the consumer the money given would be not less than fifty per cent. more, or thirty millions. Had that amount of money been left with the people, instead of being taken from them, the present stringency would have been in a large measure averted. (Applause.) Well, they may make a number of excuses when they talk about this matter. Sir Leonard Tilley, as you know, is great on calculation. (Laughter.) I'll tell you how he does it. He says, It is unfair to compare the gross amount of taxation now with that under Mr. Mackenzie. I am willing to compare them, and find how much it is per head. Mr. Mackenzie didn't tax you enough. I will add what I think he ought to have taxed you. Add a certain number of millions, divide by the number of the population, and it is as much per head. I come to my time, and I calculate the population on the rate of increase that I think ought to have taken place. Do not ask me to divide that, into what I taxed you. Why? Because—the surplus. I must deduct that. I did not spend that in carrying on the ordinary business of the country. Where did you spend it? Well, in the Pacific Railway. I won't count that. So be average the figures and divides and shows you that your taxation is really less than you paid under Mr. Mackenzie. (Loud laughter.) I fancy that some of us would be glad to settle the accounts of our debts in the same way. The accounts would balance most satisfactorily. I suspect that you paid the surplus as much as the rest of the taxation, and I suspect you are not going to get that money back. The money is paid, gone, spent, sunk, and I am going to charge Sir Leonard Tilley with to the Day of Judgment. (Applause.) We objected to

THE INCREASED SCALE OF EXPENDITURE.

There was a great cry of economy raised in 1877-8. You were told that Mr. Mackenzie was a profligate administrator of your funds, that he filled the public buildings at Ottawa with partisans who needed offices, but who were not needed in the public service, and that he spent other hundreds of thousands in erecting a new building, which also he filled with useless clerks. You were told that not so much as was spent by the Reform Government was needed to carry on the business of the country. There was no suggestion of increased expenditure. Sir Leonard Tilley said that he was opposed to the increase of the tariff from 15 to 17½ per cent. I shall give you a few items of the expenditure of 1878 and 1883—the former they thought bad and the latter they thought good. The amount spent on immigration in 1878 was $180,000, and in 1883, $437,000. Then there were the superannuations. You know that besides paying our civic servants while they serve us, even after they stop serving us, we pay them annuities and they live a long time. We pay them a good deal of money in that way. Mr. Mackenzie paid $105,000 in this way in 1878, and Sir Charles Tupper, at Halifax, when Mr. Jones was running in an election there, said: "I am not going into details. There is the amount, $105,000, for superannuations. It bears corruption and wilful extravagance on the face of it." If that is so, what amount of corruption is there in $180,000, for that is the amount paid by the Conservative Government for superannuations in 1883. There is an estimate for about $200,000 for the year just passed, and for the current year, I suppose it will increase still further. (Loud applause.)

	1878	1883
Fisheries	$ 82,000	$ 162,000
Miscellaneous	51,000	324,000
Indians	421,000	1,168,000
Mounted Police	334,000	477,000
Ottawa Police	10,000	18,500

I have the pamphlet of Sir David Macpherson in which he devotes a good many pages to the extravagance of the Mackenzie Government in connection with the Administration of Justice. That expenditure was $564,000. It was $615,000 in 1883. Excise in 1878, $215,000; in 1883, $279,000. And now we come to the in connection with which Mr. Mackenzie was alleged to have committed so many crimes. The expenditure in 1878 was $703,000. That is a large amount, I admit. They reduced it to $656,000 in 1883. (Loud laughter and applause.) Take one instance. When Mr. Mackenzie was First Minister he was Minister of Public Works, which included the Railway Department. When the present Government came into office they divided the Department into Railway and Public Works Departments. Under Mr. Mackenzie the expenditure was $59,800. The two Departments in 1883 cost $108,000, although it is only fair to say that $7,000 of that was upon an account not included in Mr. Mckenzie's time. The net cost, however, was about a hundred thousand dollars, or nearly double that under Mr. Mackenzie. Under these circumstances, who can wonder that the public expenditure, which they said in 1878 would average for the next five years if they got into office, twenty-two millions, rose from twenty-three and a half millions in 1878 to twenty-eight and three-fourth millions in 1883. I believe, although, of course, we have not the Public Accounts yet, that it was about thirty millions in the year just passed. In fact, you can mark the trail of the Tory Government by this item. From 1868 to 1874 the expenditure increased ten millions; from 1874 to 1878 the rate of expenditure was at about a standstill. From 1878 to 1884 there is an increase of about seven millions. I do not say that all that expenditure comes out of your pockets, because part of it is balanced by receipts. I do not say that all the increases are wrong. I say now, as I said in when in Government, that in a growing country like ours there must be increases. But admitting all that, how does it justify these men, who condemned the $200,000 increase of Mr. Mackenzie, and said that if they were placed in power they would do better. When I charged them with extravagance, what was their reply? They said the difference between us and you is that we've got the money. You allowed them to tax you. They did it. And now they give as a reason for not carrying out their promises that they have taken this money from you. This question of expenditure and taxation is a serious one. I want to bring it home to you. Unless the people will appreciate the direct interest it is to each of them it will not assume the importance which it should assume. Take the statistics which are furnished to the Ontario Bureau Statistics by the labour organizations of this city for last year. Returns have been obtained from 291 mechanics with families, numbering in all 1,089 souls.

THESE WERE PICKED MEN.

First, they belong to the trade organizations, which comprise, as a rule, I believe, the best of the working men. (Applause.) In the second place, they kept accounts, and the workingman who keeps account and knows what his wages are from year to year, and how his money is spent, shows his superiority over the average citizen. (Applause.) If the workingmen would keep a little passbook in which should be carefully noted what he spends and what he receives, it would solve for them many important problems concerning which the politicians now persuade them to wrong views. The results as shown by the reports of these 291 picked men were as follows:—

Average Earnings	$455 01
Extra Earnings	10 66
Total	$465 67
Average living expenses	454 75
Average saving	$ 10 32

So that the savings were about equal to the extra earnings of the wife or one of the children. The regular wages of the head of the house were absorbed as living expenses for the year. We usually calculate five to a family in Canada, but in these cases the dependents were not up to the average. These families averaged about only 3¾ members. So, having regard to that fact, and having regard to the peculiar character of the men, there could be no doubt that in other cases where the families were larger and the men not of the same degree of carefulness, all that was earned even in that year was spent. It was clear, I regret to say, that even in 1883, as a rule, it was all the mechanics could do to live. The question with the mechanic always is, "What wages can I get for my labor; what can I exchange my labor for? It is not a mere question of how much money can I get, but what food, clothing, shelter, education for my children, and other necessaries can I get for the labor of my hands?" It is clear that in 1883, which the Conservatives say was a prosperous year, it was not prosperous for the mechanic. Steady employment was what was wanted. The average number of days in which these picked men worked was 264. If you allow for Sundays and holidays there were 69 lost days. The average allowance made by English authorities for sickness is 9 days in the year, and assuming that even in our healthier climate, and under our more favorable conditions, the average is the same, there are still over fifty lost days. So there was an enormous loss for want of employment. How is it this year? Our city, as you know, is exceptionally prosperous. Various circumstances have combined to lead to that gratifying result. I believe that more than almost any other city on the continent for the last three years, certainly far more than any other city in the Dominion; and we are considering the operation of the tariff in its practical results under exceptionally favourable circumstances for those who allege that it produces prosperity. Times are harder this year. Look at this city, at Hamilton, London, Dundas, Ottawa. Take last year, again remembering what I have told you. The wages of a picked mechanic are $465. What is deducted from these wages as Dominion taxation? The revenue from customs and excise were twenty-nine and a half millions. If you allow five to a family, you will find the taxation was $25 per head. But, as I have pointed out, that is what went into the Treasury, and what we actually paid was about 50 per cent more, or about $50 per head. What proportion will this $50 bear to the whole income of $465. It is ten times the saving of the picked man. It is more than a tithe of the whole income of $465. It is half as much again as the rate in the old days of which they have been telling you. This is the taxation, which these gentlemen have been telling you, and which some of you believed, you did not feel at all. (Applause.) Now, I say a tax bears more heavily on the poor than on the rich. (Loud applause.) The rich may burn fifty tons of coal and pay a tax of $25 and not feel it. The poor man burns five or six tons and pays a tax of $2 50 or $3, and what is it? It means a third of the average savings of these picked men. I ask those who found they could not make both ends meet. I ask those picked men who could only save a trifle, if they would not have been better off if the load had been lightened, as it might have been lightened, and which was not lightened, in order that a surplus might be accumulated. (Loud applause.) They tell us that they gave prosperity to all classes, farmer, manufacturer, mechanic, and the Finance Minister declared that prosperity would last for ten years. He advised the people of this country to clap on all sail for ten years of prosperity, to speculate, buy, sell, to believe him that his fiscal policy and the great arrangements he had made assured a clear commercial sky for ten years. We took his advice. (Laughter.) We speculated, imported, manufactured.

WE BOUGHT OURSELVES RICH

in the North West. (Loud laughter.) They brought on the election at the height of the season of apparent prosperity which by these and other means they had created. Only last year, when I twitted the Finance Minister with this statement of his about ten years of prosperity, he said, "I said so, it's quite true, and I say still, that if our merchants won't import too much, and won't be too anxious to sell, we will have seven years more of prosperity." We were in adversity even then. He said we were prosperous, however, and that we would have seven years more of it. Perhaps he meant that we would have seven years more of the same kind of prosperity we are having now. But that is not the kind that was promised. (Applause and laughter.) They did create a fictitious prosperity in some lines of business. They gave the manufacturers in some lines exorbitant profits, as, for instance, in cotton and sugar. We told them they would induce an excess of capital to seek these branches, that there would be a time of inflation, operatives would be collected in centres, and that after a brief period the market would be glutted, the mills would be idle, and loss would result to the capitalists, and lack of work to the operatives. That is exactly what has happened. Look at the condition of the cotton industry for the last two years. And it was only yesterday we learned that arrangements had been made to limit the production of the mills and so advance prices, in fact to form a cotton monopoly in order to make up their losses and to extricate themselves from the troubles in which they have been plunged.

ACCIDENT ON THE O & Q RAILWAY.

TWO MEN ROASTED ALIVE.

An accident occurred on the C. P. R. about six o'clock Saturday morning near Smith's Falls. There were three cars burned and two men killed. Some others were badly injured. One of the killed is the baggage man on the train, named McDonald, the other party's name is unknown. The accident occurred to the Montreal express going east which passes Peterborough at 11.11 p. m. An axle was broken about half a mile from the junction. Two men were burned to death and another had his leg broken. The engine kept the track and the Ottawa sleeper saved from burning. After the three passenger cars jumped the track, they ran in against a water tank and knocked it over.

Nothing whatever was saved from the baggage express or mail car. It is the body of baggageman McDonald that was recovered about 8 o'clock. Limbs and head were completely burnt off. Only a small mass of smoking flesh was all that remained to be identified. The Frenchman's body has not yet been recovered. The loss to the company is estimated at $60,000. So far no blame can be attached to the company or employes. The train had passed the switch at least four car lengths before the accident occurred, and there are no signs of ties, rails or switch being out of place. All Peterborough letters going east to Ottawa or Montreal, were of course destroyed with the mail coach. Several persons in town have thus lost money remitted, one young gentleman having lost in this way $28. Persons failing to receive prompt replies to letters that must have gone by the above train, will receive an explanation in the accident.

"Dr. Sexton is known widely as a great scholar and profound thinker. One can well imagine, therefore, that when he came into discussion with Bradlaugh's chief disciple, Mr. Watts, he won an easy victory. In the debate Mr. Watts put forth the shallowest but no doubt his best—reasons against the Divine nature of Christianity. Dr. Sexton's replies were animated by the noblest spirit. His grand views curiously contrast with the flippant criticisms of his antagonist."—Englishman.

well established that consumption if attended to in its first stages, can be cured. There is, however, no true and rational way to cure this disease, which is really scrofulous ulceration of the lungs, except through purifying the blood. Keep the liver in perfect order and pure blood will be the result. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," a purely vegetable compound does all this and more; while it purifies the blood it also builds up the system, strengthening it against future attacks of disease. THE EGYPTIAN EMBROGLIO.

Battle Fought in the Soudan.

Brilliant Victory of the British Troops—Hand to hand Fight of 1,500 against 10,000—Great Slaughter of the Rebels.

A despatch from Lord Wolseley, dated Korti, January 21st reads:—"General Stewart has had a heavy engagement with a portion of the Mahdi's forces near Abu Klea Wells, near Metemma. The rebels had collected from Berber, Metemma, and Omdurmanna. The last place was recently captured by the Mahdi, and thus the men were released from there to fight Stewart. On the afternoon of January 19th Stewart's cavalry reported that the enemy were in a position a few miles this side of the wells. As it was too late in the day to allow an advance and successful encounter, Stewart bivouacked for the night. The enemy kept up a harmless fire all night, and erected works on Stewart's right flank. On Saturday Stewart endeavoured to draw the enemy on to make an attack, but the rebels hesitated. In consequence of this Stewart left all his impedimenta and camels under guard and moved forward, keeping his forces in the form of a square. The men were on foot. The British army passed round the enemy's left flank, forcing them to make an attack or be subject to an enfilade fire. The enemy wheeled to the left and delivered a well organized charge under a withering fire from our men. The square was unfortunately penetrated by sheer weight of numbers about its left rear, where the heavy cavalry and camel regiment were in position. The admirable steadiness of our men enabled them to maintain a hand to hand fight with the opposing force, while severe punishment was being inflicted upon the enemy by all parts of the square. The enemy were finally driven back under a heavy fire from all sides. The 19th Hussars then pushed forward to the wells, which were in our possession by five in the evening. The enemy left not less the 800 slain around the square. The prisoners who were taken while the enemy were retiring report that the number of the wounded was exceptional. One immediate effect of the battle is that many of the rebels are submitting. It was necessary for the army to remain at the wells some hours to obtain water. As soon as practicable the intention was to push on with all expedition to Metemma. The English wounded are all doing very well, and Wolsely says Stewart concludes his report as follows:—"It has been my duty to command a force from which exceptional work, exceptional hardship, and exceptional fighting have been called for. It would be impossible to adequately describe the admirable support given me by every officer and man of the force. I regret to say our loss was severe, but our success has been so complete that it may dishearten the enemy to such an extent that all their future fighting may be of a less obstinate character." Lord Wolsely says, "Stewart's operations have been most creditable to him as a commander, and the nation has every reason to be proud of the gallantry and splendid spirit of Her Majesty's soldiers on this occasion. Our losses were 9 commissioned officers killed and 9 wounded, 65 non-commissioned officers and men killed and 85 wounded. Stewarts force consists of 1,500 men, and the enemy's of from 8,000 to 10,000."

THE CANADIANS IN EGYPT.

His Excellency the Governor-general received a telegram from the military authorities Monday afternoon, confirming the report of the drowning of Doyle, and relating the following additional casualties to members of the Canadian contingent in Egypt:—Solomon Rigeault died of small-pox at Hennek on December 17th; Alex. M. Armstrong, of Manitoba, died of enteric fever on January 3rd; Leon Chalestaine, of Ottawa, drowned at Semneh on December 18th. No voyageur named MacDonald is dead. Doyle was drowned at Ambigol on December 13th.

Co-operative Life Assurance and Government Supervision.

We have been requested to publish the following communication:—

To the Editor of the Monetary Times:

DEAR SIR,—Permit me space in your valuable journal to make a few remarks on the above question. Sir Leonard Tilley, in moving the Dominion House of Parliament into a Committee of the whole at its last session, stated that it was expedient to amend the Consolidated Insurance Act of 1877 with respect to companies transacting the business of life assurance under the title of Co-operative Life Assurance Companies, Mutual Benefit Associations, and the like. His reason for calling the attention of the House to the necessity of amending this Act was a cogent one, viz.:—That as these companies or associations purported to transact life assurance, there was no valid reason why they should be exempted from making a deposit with the Finance Minister and a supervision exercised over them by the Insurance Department.

What therefore appeared very strange was the withdrawal of the proposed Bill. It is to be hoped that, at the coming session the matter will be again taken up and a useful, and a necessary enactment which shall better provide for the security of policy-holders in these association, be placed on the statute book of the Dominion. The arguments that can be brought forward as a reason for Parliament taking up this question and passing upon it are polyhedral. I will refer to a few.

In the first place it appears a great act of inconsistency and injustice to compel responsible companies, by which are meant those with subscribed and paid up capitals, besides those with large invested interests, to make annual statements to the Insurance Department, place in the hands of the Government hundreds of thousands of dollars, as a guarantee for the fulfillment of their contracts, and yet allow these irresponsible associations to continue to delude and misrepresent to an innocent public. The misrepresentation is in the statement made by the advocates of these associations that their system of insurance is as sound and contains as much of the elements of longevity as that of the regular line companies.

[Here follow quotations of authorities which our space compels us to omit.]

With the facts above authenticated, and the views held by the best authorities on this continent, which should correspond with those held by any business man of common sense, I think the Government are not fulfilling their duty to the public unless they take the matter up at the next Parliament, and not give it a year's hoist as was done before.

Yours, &c.,
H. M. POUSSETTE.

TELEPHONE SUITS.

The Minister of Agriculture has rendered his decision in the case of the Bell patent, but the actions in Court will still go on, as the Bell Company are suing the Dominion Telephone Company, of Montreal, for infringing not only the Bell receiver, but the Edison, Blake, Anders and Phelps patents, on transmitters and receivers, and the Toronto Telephone Manufacturing Company is being sued on one transmitter and three receiver patents. Writs have also been issued by the Bell company against the Port Arthur Telephone Company, and against J. F. Ruttan and other subscribers to the exchange of this Company. Some of these cases will come up at the Spring Sittings of the Court of Chancery in Toronto. The Court of Appeal have yet to decide as to the right of the Minister of Agriculture to try the case of the Bell patents.

Last night at Dr. Sexton's lecture, the Queen's Avenue Methodist Church was crowded. There could not have been less than five thousand present. Every available seat was occupied.—London Free Press.

WARREN LELAND,

whom everybody knows as the successful manager of the Largest Hotel Enterprises

of America, says that while a passenger from New York on board a ship going around Cape Horn, in the early days of emigration to California, he learned that one of the officers of the vessel had cured himself, during the voyage, of an obstinate disease by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Since then Mr. LELAND has recommended AYER'S SARSAPARILLA in many similar cases, and he has never yet heard of its failure to effect a radical cure.

Some years ago one of Mr. LELAND'S farm laborers bruised his leg. Owing to the bad state of his blood, an ugly scrofulous swelling or lump appeared on the injured limb. Horrible itching of the skin, with burning and darting pains through the lump, made life almost intolerable. The leg became enormously enlarged, and running ulcers formed, discharging great quantities of extremely offensive matter. No treatment was of any avail until the man, by Mr. LELAND'S direction, was supplied with AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, which allayed the pain and irritation, healed the sores, removed the swelling, and completely restored the limb to use.

Mr. LELAND has personally used

for Rheumatism, with entire success; and, after careful observation, declares that, in his belief, there is no medicine in the world equal to it for the cure of Liver Disorders, Gout, the effects of high living, Salt Rheum, Sores, Eruptions, and all the various forms of blood diseases.

We have Mr. LELAND'S permission to invite all who may desire further evidence in regard to the extraordinary curative powers of AYER'S SARSAPARILLA to see him personally either at his mammoth Ocean Hotel, Long Branch, or at the popular Leland Hotel, Broadway, 27th and 28th Streets, New York.

Mr. LELAND'S extensive knowledge of the good done by this unequalled eradicator of blood poisons enables him to give inquirers much valuable information.

THE RED FLAG.

BY

M. E. BRADDON.

Author of "Lady Audley's Secret," &c. &c.

They drove along the new Viviana. The narrow street was all in commotion; people at the shop-doors, people at the upper windows; a Babel of voices, a shrill uproar of laughter and exclamation. But in the Place de la Bourse, and on the boulevard beyond, the excitement culminated. It was the fever of Epsom when the Derby has just been won—the stir and tumult of Doncaster at the crowning moment of the Leger; and yet a deeper and stronger fever, for this had the awfulness of life and death.

Victory, yes; but where? Which of the armies was it—MacMahon's or Bazaine's? Or was it the two armies which had crushed the Prussian forces between them—which had met and joined, like two living walls, deadly, invincible, squeezing out the life of the enemy?

Every one was asking questions, every one answering, stating, counter-stating, denying; but in this tumult of statement and counter-statement there was a difficulty in arriving at any positive fact, except the one all-inspiring fact that there had been a tremendous victory on the French side. Flags were flying at all the windows—flags produced as if by enchantment; and here came an open carriage slowly through the mob—the carriage of a famous opera-singer. In an instant it was stopped, surrounded by that surging sea of humanity; and the Diva stood up in her carriage at the entreaty—nay, almost the command—of the public, to sing the "Marseillaise."

The glorious finely-trained voice rolled out the soul-stirring words, the notes rising bird-like and clear in the summer air, floating up to the summer sky; and then fifty thousand voices, the deep rough tones of an excited populace, burst forth in the chorus, like human thunder. Impossible to resist the magnetism of that passionate patriotism. The eyes of strong men grew dim, women sobbed hysterically. France, la belle France—she had been in peril perhaps; yes, strong though she was, there was never war without peril; but she was safe—safe, triumphant, glorious, with her foot upon the enemy's neck. Alas, to think how the Gallic cock crew and flapped his wings during that one wild hour!

The bridal-party pushed their way into the Restaurant Champeaux. Under the glass roof, in the covered flower-garden, there was such a mob that it was very difficult to get a small table in a corner, and a waiter who would cease from hurrying to and fro to take an order from the newcomers. Every one was celebrating the victory with good cheer of some kind. Champagne corks were flying, plates clattering, spoons and forks jingling, and everywhere rose the same din of voices.

Durand and Mortemar contrived, by strenuous exertions, to secure a bottle of champagne and another of borbeaux, a poulet gras and a Chateaubriand, some fruit, cheese, salads and the wedding-party breakfasted merrily amid-st the din, squeezed together in their corner, stiflingly hot under the burning glass roof and in the crowded atmosphere. But who would not be happy on a wedding-day, and in the hour of victory? They sat at the little table for more than an hour, nearly half of which time had been wasted in waiting; and when they went out again it seemed to Durand's keen eye as if a change had come over the spirit of the crowd outside. There were only about half the people, and faces were graver—some faces of business men looking even perplexed and troubled; voices less loud; no more hats thrown into the air, no more laughter.

The rest of the bridal-party were too much absorbed in each other to note this change in the public temper. The carriages were waiting to take them to the Buttes Chaumont, where it had been decided to spend the afternoon. They were to go back to a dinner, which Madame Schubert and Rose had planned between them, in Madame Schubert's apartment, which was spacious and splendid in the eyes of the dwellers in Gît le Cœur. Durand and Mortemar had wished to give a dinner at some popular restaurant—au Moulin Rouge, for instance; but the women had set their faces against such extravagance. Rose argued that it was a sin to squander money on eating and drinking. She had heard that at such places a napoleon was charged for a single dish, a franc for a pear or a peach; yes, when peaches were to be had for three or four sous at the street-corners. So Maman Schubert and Rose had held grave consultations, and had gone marketing together on the eve of the wedding; and now, while they were driving merrily towards the Place de la Bastille, the daube à la Provençale was simmering slowly on the little charcoal stove in la Schubert's tiny kitchen. The petits fours from the confectioner's in the Rue du Bac were ready in the doll's-house larder, and the dinner-table was out with its fruit and flowers and golden-crusted loaves of finest bread, and bottles of innocent Medoc, ready for the feast.

The excitement of the good news pervaded Paris. The Rue St. Antoine, the Place de la Bastille, were alive with idlers. They drove by the long dreary Rue de la Roquette, past the prison-walls, away to Menilmontant and Belleville, where the honest harmless working population, the blue blouses and white muslin caps, were all astir in the sunshine—a seething crowd. There was a kind of fair on the Boulevard, Saturday and Sunday fair—swings and roundabouts, and a juggler or two—all merry in the white August dust, under the hot blue sky.

They drove through narrow old streets on the top of the hill—dusty, crowded, unwholesome, wretched dwellings; a truculent rabble, blue blouses, white night caps, everywhere; queer little wine-shops, queer little eating-houses, an intolerable odor of petit bleus and absinthe suisse, a tumult of harsh voices—and so to the wonderful gardens, the green valleys and Alpine crags, the blue lakes and Swiss summer-houses, and Grecian temples of the old, old quarries that have been made into a pleasure-ground for the people of Paris; surely the prettiest, gayest, most picturesque playground that ever a tyrant gave to his slaves. Let us call him a tyrant, now that he is asleep in his English grave, and all the good he did for the Paris he loved so well is appropriated by new masters, his name obliterated from all things which his brain devised and his enterprise created.

The wedding-party drove in by the gate that had admitted so many brides and bridegrooms, smart and smiling, in their new clothes, their new bliss. They drove a little way into the grounds, and then alighted, and climbed one of the Alpine promontories, and looked down upon the gay scene beneath. Never was a more joyous crowd beneath a brighter sky, amidst a fairer landscape. It seemed as if all Paris was taking holiday. The verdant valley was a palpitating mass of blue blouses, white caps, parti-colored raiment, brightened here and there by the uniform of a sergent de ville. One could hardly see the greensward, so dense was this muster of human beings. The chalets were crowded with customers; lemonade, syrups, coffee, ices, Bavarian beer, were being consumed wholesale. Mothers and children, fathers, sweethearts: Paris was all here en famille, all elated at the great news, somewhat vague at present. But Gaston and his young wife went higher and higher, seeking some solitary spot beyond this holiday throng, and at last found a hill upon which vegetation was wilder and more romantic, and where they were alone for a little while, looking down upon Paris lying in an oval basin at their feet, a city of white houses and church towers, domes and statues, girdled with gardens, flashing with fountains, the beautiful river winding through the white suburbs and gleaming like a silver ribbon, touched with specks of gold.

"Is it not a happy city?" asked Gaston, proud of his knowledge, the only lesson he had ever learned.

Farther to their left, on the slope of the hill, lay the cemetery, cypress and catacomb, Egyptian sepulchers, Roman temples, glittering whitely in the sun, amidst a tangle of summer foliage.

"Shall we be there, among the lines, when our life is over, I wonder?" mused Kathleen.

"Perhaps you will have a tomb like Balzac's or Musset's. Who knows?"

"Who knows, indeed, dearest? I have been earning my bread by my pen for the last ten years, and do not find myself any nearer the fame of a Balzac than when I began. Yet who knows what I may do now I have you to work for? Balzac had a long time to wait. Fame comes in an hour sometimes. And of late, inspired by thoughts of you, I have nursed the dim idea of a novel, as I tramped backwards and forwards to the office. Yes, I believe I have a fancy which, worked out faithfully, might hit the Parisians. But a journalist is the drudge of literature. All his faculties are the slaves of a tyrannical master, whose name is To-day. He must think only of the present, write only for the present. He must harbor neither memories of the past nor dreams of the future. If Shakespeare and Goethe had written for the papers we should have neither Faust nor Hamlet."

"But you will not always have to work for the papers?"

"Who can tell? I must be at work early to-morrow to write a description of that scene on the Bourse for the Monday—number."

"If I could only help you!" sighed Kathleen.

"You do help me, dearest. You have helped me to nobler ambitions, to purer hopes. You have made me work with higher purpose, with steadier aim. You are the good spirit of my life."

"Tell me about your story," she said, "the story you have in your mind."

"It is all about love—and you. I will tell you nothing. But some day I shall contrive to write it, between whiles, between paragraph and paragraph, leader and leader, and I shall get a publisher to produce it, under a nom de plume, and the book shall be the talk of Paris; and you shall read it with smiles and tears, and you shall say, 'O Gaston, what a painter, what a poet, what an inspired dreamer this man must be! I only wish I knew who he is, that I might worship him.' And I shall say, 'Worship me, love. I am the poet and the dreamer; and you are my only Egeria.'"

He looked like a poet, as he lay at her feet on the sun-burnt sward, his eyes gazing dreamily over the city in the valley—dreamily away towards Mount Valerian and the fortifications on the other side of Paris.

They loitered away the long summer afternoon in serenest contentment, in deep inexpressible bliss. It seemed to them as if life were henceforward perfect. They had nothing left to desire—except, perhaps, on Gaston's side, fame and wealth, in a remote dream-like future. Kathleen had no desire to be rich. Poverty had never hurt her; except in that one sad time, when her sister was ill. And now she had a little money, put away in a secret place, against any such evil hour. Poverty had no flavor of bitterness for this easily satisfied nature. She rose as gaily as a lark; she went about her little duties singing for very joyousness. Her humble fare was sweetened by her contented spirit. Her humble home was beautified by all those little arts which endear lowly rooms to the dweller. And now, to begin life anew, on the same third floor, in the Rue Gît le Cœur, with her lover-husband, was like the crowning bliss on the last page of a fairy tale.

The streets were very quiet, and had a somewhat gloomy look as the wedding-party drove back to Gît le Cœur; but they were all too happy, too much engrossed by their own bliss, to remark the change that had come over the aspect of the city. No more flags, no more cheering, no more songs of triumph.

"I wonder they did not illuminate some of the public buildings," said Durand, as they passed the Palais de Justice.

Not a festival lamp twinkled in the August sundown; not a star of colored light sparkled on all the length of the quays; not a rocket shot up above the chestnuts in the Gardens of the Tuileries. Paris wore her every-day aspect. However elated the city had been this morning, she was taking her triumph soberly to-night.

The little dinner in the Rue Gît le Cœur was a great success. The feast was held in Madame Schubert's apartment, and that kindly matron presided at the banquet. Never was there a merrier meal; voices all mingling now and then in a joyous tumult of speech—voices low and sweet, deep and resonant—and ripples of happy laughter; a frequent clinking of glasses, and anecdotes and calembors. Gaston's friend the journalist turned out a wit of the first water; and the gray-bearded grave artist proved wonderfully good company; he was loaded with anecdotes, like a six-chambered revolver, and before his audience had done laughing at one story he had begun another, still funnier, and then another, funnier again, a perpetual-crescendo of mirth.

Just as a crowning feature, with the dessert, came a single bottle of champagne, whose cork exploded with the force of a cannon.

"Listen there!" cried the journalist. "How that thunders! It is the true wine of war."

And at this a burst of gaiety. It is such a droll thing, la guerre, when one's own country is winning.

"Just one little glass more, une petite-lle, my friend," said Gaston, filling his fellow-scribbler's glass, "to fete our arms."

After the champagne, Gaston slipped out quietly, with just a whispered explanation to his wife. He had to go round to the newspaper office, in the Rue St. Andre des Arts, to arrange about his descriptive article for Sunday, or, in point of fact, to write his paper on the spot.

He was gone about an hour and a half, and although the anecdotes and lembors went on, and the fun was fast and ous all the time, that hour and a half seemed long to his bride.

When he came back the gloom of his countenance scared the revellers.

"Why, Gaston, thou lookest as dolorous as the statue of the Commandante! What ails thee, Trouble-feast?"

"It was all a hoax," cried Mortemar, flinging down his hat savagely, "a trick of that black-hearted devil Bismarck. There has been no French victory—defeat, if anything. And our shouts, our songs, our flags—all madness and folly."

"O, but come, now, that is a little too strong on the part of ce coquin Bismarck."

"Yes, it is too strong. He is strong and we are weak—weaker than water. A nation that has no prudence, no caution, no coolness of brain, can never be a great nation. We are children, always ready to take a will-o'-the-wisp for a comet."

"We are Celts, my friend, that is all. And we have the strength and the weakness of the Celtic nature," quietly answered the gray-bearded painter. "I am afraid these slow square-headed Saxons will get the better of us. It is the old race of the hare and the tortoise over again."

CHAPTER V.

THE COMING OF THE SQUARE-HEADS.

No, there had been no victory. That outburst of patriotic fervor had wasted itself upon an idle dream. Paris awoke in a very savage humor on Sunday morning; and then came laughter and cynical jests. Everybody accused his neighbor of having eagerly swallowed the lie. Everybody declared that he, for his own part, had never believed the news so greedily accepted by the mob.

But in those two new homes in the Rue Gît le Cœur there was bliss, whether the arms of France were victorious or otherwise for many in those unknown lands, watch the Bourse rose jubilant, and with glorious gaily-colored maps, strutting up their flags here and there on the map to show where the French troops were, the very spot where great battles might be expected immediately, great victories—a new Austerlitz, a second Jena.

What do little birds, in their nests on St. Valentine's Day care what battles the big eagles, the hawks, and the vultures are fighting far away among wild mountains, on Alpine summits? And the birds have their nests, and each to each is the world in little.

"Let the world slide, we shall never be younger," said Gaston, who knew Shakespeare, in the translation of Charles Hugo.

He and his young wife were utterly happy. If there were dark clouds impending they could not see them. Is not love blind—blind to all things except the beloved? The faintest shadow on Gaston's brow troubled Kathleen, but not those signs of tempest which were gathering round France.

The new home was full of smiles. Kathleen and Gaston had smartened the old furniture by some modest additions bought before their marriage—a writing-table, a cabinet, a bookcase filled with Gaston's books, the accumulation of the last ten years, a few old mezzo-tints picked up from time to time at the print-shops on the quay. Kathleen and Rose had toiled for months to make both homes complete and pretty. Curtains and chair-covers were all the work of those two pairs of industrious hands.

Durand, who was richer than Mortemar, had taken the lower floor for his own menage. In the Rue Gît le Cœur that second floor ranked as a rather important suite of rooms.

The apartment consisted of salon, fifteen feet by twelve, with two casement windows commanding the shabby little courtyard; a bedroom somewhat smaller; a little room which would serve as workshop for Durand, who did a good deal of artistic cabinet-work on his own account after business hours; and a tiny kitchen. Durand's skilful hands had made all the best of the furniture in the dead watches of the night, when other men were sleeping or dissipating; so the home of Rose and Philip was furnished in a style worthy of a man who stood high in the syndicate of cabinet-makers.

But while life was so full of happiness for the newly-married, the sky was darkening outside. An army of undeniable valor, but in number terribly inferior to the foe, and led by generals of scandalous incapacity, was brought face to face with the whole of Germany, in arms as one man, burning to avenge the agony and shame of sixty years ago. On the 4th of August came the defeat of General Douay, beaten and slain at Wissembourg; and on the 6th the still more deplorable reverses of MacMahon at Worth, at Freischwiller, and at Reichshoffen. By the breach thus opened the enemy poured into France like a torrent. They came, the tetes carrees! There was no longer room for self-deception. This was invasion.

And now far off, dimly as in a dream, Paris beheld the pale spectre of siege and famine. The Parisians knew hardly anything of the truth, which came to them only in garbled fragments. They knew not that upon the heels of these three or four hundred thousand men let loose upon France would follow hundreds of thousands more; yes, nearly all the male population of the old German Empire.

Dark rumors of evil without the walls only drew those two households nearer to each other, made home joys sweeter, love closer. But now Kathleen learnt the meaning of fear. She was full of morbid terrors when her husband was away from her. She pictured an advance guard falling upon him in the street; a shell from the enemy's artillery bursting at his feet. And Gaston went every day to the office of the Drapeau Rouge. He had leaders to write, tartines, letters, patriotic articles breathing warlike fire, every full stop seeming like a shell. France beaten, France invaded? Ah, but there was nothing in this world so unlikely, so near the impossible; and yet, while he wrote, French arms were flung down, French soldiers were flying—a wild rabble—from before the face of the foe; and the invader's foot was on the soil, tramping onward steadily, gigantic, invincible, like some mighty force of Nature, slow, cumulative, pitiless. But say that the soldiers of France had fled; say that Achilles himself had flung down his sword and shield, and taken to his heels; whose was the fault? Why, naturally, it was the government that was to blame, shrieked the Red Flag. Down with the Ministers! Let us have new Ministers, and our arms will be victorious. MacMahon and Bazaine will unite their forces, and the tide of victory will roll backward across those advancing herds of Huns and Pandours, and sweep the savages back to their native pine-woods, their desert wastes beside the Danube.

There was a sudden shuffle of cards in the political game. Gramont and Ollivier retired, driven out by a vote of censure, and General Montauban, Comte de Palikao, took the helm.

"A military Mercadet with a touch of Robert Macaire," said the Red Flag. "What good could be expected from such canaille?"

The month of August wore on—a month of anxiety, of wavering hopes, of strengthening fears. History records no bloodier battles than Rezonville and Gravelotte, fought in the middle of that anxious month; and although Bazaine claimed the first as a victory, he was still steadily retreating; every day brought him nearer Metz; where he finally retired, abandoning his communications with MacMahon and the rest of France.

Then came the rumor that Metz was blockaded; Bazaine and his hundred and eighty thousand men were bound round with bonds of iron, useless, helpless. MacMahon was encamped at Chalons, re-creating his army, and thither regiment after regiment of undisciplined youth was sent to him; and undisciplined youth made the country round ring with the noise of its follies, made France blush for her sons. And still the flood of invasion rolled on, steadily as the rising tide; a week, a fortnight at most, and the Crown Prince with his victorious army would debouch upon the plain of Genevilliers. And now in earnest this time, seeing the enemy so near, Paris awakened to the possibility of a siege; but even yet fear was not so serious as to stimulate the city to prompt and earnest action. The people waited—expectant, hopeful still; something would happen, something unforeseen—a miracle, perhaps.

Something unforeseen did happen; but the unforeseen wore the shape of shame, defeat, humiliation—an empire overthrown in one bloody day; Emperor a state prisoner, Empress a fugitive, army prisoners of war.

First came the tidings that MacMahon, instead of trying to block the passage of the Germans, instead of falling back upon the capital to fight one of the world's decisive battles under the walls of Paris, was moving northward, obviously intent upon joining and releasing Bazaine.

What might not be hoped from a coalition between two such generals—one who had risen with every defeat, the other as famous for indomitable energy as for military skill? What might not be hoped for from Bazaine's hundred and eighty thousand men, the flower of the French army?

For two days, the first balmy days of September, a restless, feverish, over-excited populace lived upon the boulevards and in the streets; questions, statements, counter-statements flew from lip to lip, while false reports and monstrous exaggerations were in the very air men breathed. Then, on a Saturday night, came the news of a great calamity; a terrible battle had been fought, was still being fought, with fluctuating fortunes, in the environs of Sedan. But the ultimate result? For this Paris waited with inexpressible agitation. The newsvendors' kiosques were besieged by tumultuous crowds; hands were stretched forth tremulous with excitement, clutching at the papers; men stood upon the boulevard benches, waving the news aloud, above a sea of heads.

Nothing was certain in the news thus devoured, nothing precise. The crowd, deprived of official information, was consumed by a nervous irritability, a fever of hopes and fears. Men were impatient, captious, quarrelsome. At the first word of doubt they were ready to treat each other as Prussians or traitors; for a mere nothing they would have challenged each other to mortal combat. Voices were sharp, strangers glared at one another with angry eyes.

Lamps began to shimmer in the summer twilight, cafes and wine-shops shone out upon the night, and gradually, imperceptibly, the knowledge of a great catastrophe spread and circulated on every side. Details were wanting; but France had suffered some terrible defeat. That was seen in every face. No one in Paris slept that night. The Corps Legislatif called a midnight sitting; and the Empire sank through the stage of this world to the realm of chaos and night, evanescent as a scene in a fairy play; and the curtain rose upon the Republic.

The next day was Sunday, September the 4th, and the newborn Republic began in the glory of a cloudless summer sky. O strange people, children of smiles and tears! Last night Paris had been plunged to the bottom of a black abyss, steeped in the horror of calamity, brought face to face with the certainty of an imminent siege, her army annihilated, her Empire fallen. Paris had laid herself down in dust and ashes, with weeping and wailing for the splendor that had perished, the glory that was gone.

To-day, Sunday, and a holiday, Paris awoke radiant. Again the excited populace filled the boulevards, poured along the streets, a strong current of humanity trending towards the Champs Elysees and the Bois. But to-day the note is changed. It is no longer the harsh minor of Rachel's wail for her lost sons, but the glad psalm of Deborah. The Empire has fallen, has fallen. Long live the Republic! Let them come, the tetes carrees! We are more than a match for them now. Joy beams on every face. The crowd wears its holiday clothes, its holiday aspect.

Every now and then a battalion of the National Guard tramps singing along the roadway. They stop their song to cry, "Long live the Republic!" and thunderous acclamations reply, "Long live the Republic!"

And now came a time of preparation, expectation, anticipation. The days of uncertainty were over, and William and his conquering hosts were pouring steadily on towards this beautiful city Paris. Bismarck had avowed that he bore no grudge against France; he made war only on the Empire. And lo, the Empire was ended like a morning dream, the eagles were draggled in the blood-stained dust of disastrous battlefields; and still Germany pressed onward, laughing with a sardonic laughter at the impediments that France set in her way. Here a bridge blown to the four winds, there a viaduct shattered, railway-lines cut, destruction everywhere; and yet the barbarous hordes tramped on over the ruins that strewed the way, pouring, pouring, pouring onward, like the army of locusts in Holy Writ.

The Parisians expected an assault, a great battle, victory or speedy doom. They waited boldly, strong in their faith that Bellona was on their side. The goddess of battle had hidden her face from them hitherto, but it must be that she loved her France, laurel-crowned Victrix of so many glorious fields, mother of heroes.

Yet, although expectant of short and sharp strife, Paris prudently prepared against the hazard of a blockade. She gathered in her flocks and herds, she heaped up corn and coal. The Grand Opera, that palatial pile which was to have been a crowning glory of the Empire, was converted into a storehouse, half reservoir, half granary. She set to work to complete her unfinished fortifications, but passing slowly. She armed all her citizens. Chassepots and Remingtons were your only wear. And honest shopkeepers, who had never pulled a trigger, swaggered and strutted in warlike gear. Every head wore the kepi; every man told himself that come what might, let trade or family perish, he must be there, on the walls, ready to receive William and his Pandours. With some there was an idea that those advancing hordes were fresh from their native pine-forests, half-naked savages, with long hair and wolf-skins slung across their brawny shoulders—such men as destroyed Varus and his legions—such men as fought and died for Vercingetorix.

"Let them come," said the sleek grocers and bakers of Paris. "We are getting ready for them."

Catarrh—A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished, he claims the Catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favourable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.—Montreal Star, Nov. 17, 1882. 48-52t

A Story of a Tree-Frog.

One sultry night, in Indiana, I sat busily writing upstairs close to an open window. My lamp, placed upon my desk, attracted countless numbers of the insect world that come out to see their friends only after dark; there was a constant buzz around the lamp, and many a scorched victim, falling on its back, vainly kicked its little legs in air.

Suddenly a clear low whistle sounded from the window—a sound somewhat like the sound made when a boy blows into the orifice of a trunk-key. Startled for a moment, I turned my chair and beheld on the window sill a little tree-frog gravely looking at me. His skin—of an exquisite pale apple-green color—shone in the lamp-light. Fearful that I might frighten him away, I sat motionless in the chair, watching him intently. Presently he gave another little whistle, as clear and sharp as a bird note. He was evidently making up his mind that I was to be trusted (a confidence not misplaced), and soon he gave an easy spring and was on the desk before me. I hardly dared to breathe, lest he should be alarmed. He looked at me carefully for a few minutes; and then, hopping under the lamp, he began a slaughter of the insect creation, such as I had never before witnessed. He captured in a flash any careless fly or moth that came near him, declining to touch the dead ones that had cremated themselves.

After half an hour's enjoyment of this kind, my apple-green friend hopped rather lazily across the desk, repeated the whistle with which he had entered—as if to say good night—and went out into the dark. I proceeded with my work and soon forgot my visitor. But judge my surprise when on the next night he again appeared, again signalled his coming with his musical cry, and again took up his position under my lamp.

For nearly three weeks did my small friend visit me nightly, and he and I became great friends. House flies were his special delicacy. Stealthily crawling up the painted wall, clinging to the smooth surface with the little disks or suckers on his feet, he would draw close up to his body first one leg then the other, and when within proper distance, he would dart forward and, snatching the fly, would swing head downward, his hind feet glued firmly to the wall! Then, attaching his forefeet, he would move on in quest of another.

He never missed his aim, and he would quietly and calmly zig-zag up and down the side wall after every fly he saw there. He became quite accustomed to me, and would hop on my hand, and sit there looking at me with a grave composure ludicrous to behold. —T. Lancey, in St. Nicholas for September.

The Car Conductor's Little Extra.

As the shrill whistle blown by a conductor on a street car on one of the Brooklyn lines sounded last evening and the car was brought to a standstill on the outskirts of the city, a man in the smokers' department tried in vain to stand up. The conductor nimbly hastened to his relief and tenderly lifted him to a standing posture. The passenger was intoxicated, but not helplessly so. The conductor assisted him to the step and then to the ground, took hold of his shoulders from behind and faced him around toward a street crossing the car track, and said, respectfully:

"That's your way, sir."

Winking to another passenger the conductor then pulled a half dollar from his vest pocket and held it up.

"The old duffer gave it to me at the ferry and told me to keep the change. I know where he lives and often take care of him. He's an old seafaring man, retired on his money, and he never goes home sober. I'm always glad to see him get on. There are other such cases. Generally I get a quarter, with the fare to come out of it. It wouldn't be allowed by the president of the road if he knew it, but the conductor earns the extra money all the same. The tipplers who are so generous with their money know that they are a pile of trouble to us, and that's the reason they contribute. Did you ever try to wake up a drunken man after he got into his first nap? You have to fight with 'em to get 'em to rouse up, and then it's like handling a load of pig iron to get 'em out of the car. That old chap is one of the good-natured ones. I wonder how he is navigating?"—New York Sun.

Dogs by Express.

"There goes John Abel, baggage master. He took three dogs over to Philadelphia with him once, and found them anything but pleasant company. There were two big bloodhounds belonging to an 'Uncle Tom' company that had been showing here, and the other was a large Newfoundland. Both of the 'Uncle Tom' dogs began to show bad blood toward the Newfoundland shortly after the train started, and soon worked themselves into a fierce frenzy, threatening every moment to break their fastenings.

"Abel was a prisoner, unable to escape from the car while it was in motion, as the dogs were fastened at both doors. He could just keep out of their reach so long as their chains held. It doesn't need any diagram to explain how far from pleasant it was to stand holding on to the side of a car going forty miles an hour, and just out of reach of three crazy dogs, their fastenings liable to break at any moment. The train was an express, and a long mile between stops, and I believe Jack was held in this position for something like an hour. When it did finally check up he didn't lose much time in jumping out of the side door, making his way to the coaches, and bringing the owner of the bloodhounds to the baggage car, who shortened their ropes, and revealed to the badly scared baggage-masher that each of the dogs wore a thin wire mask—so thin as to be almost invisible, and yet strong enough to prevent them from biting. He explained that they always wore these in the play, in order to insure Eliza against being torn to pieces.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Fisherman's Soliloquy.

"Singular," mused an old Delaware fisherman as he sat picking bones out of himself like pin feathers after dinner; "singular, a shad has got 204,000 bones an' a shadder hain't got nary a one. I kan't understand no sich o' grammer like that, no how. Marthy Ann, whur's them thar nets you 'lowed ye'd done got mended afore turn o' the tide?" And as the cares of life surged over his soul once more all contemplation of the normal structure passed from his busy mind, even as an ephemeral joke that flutters faintly to the ground at the Concord Summer School of Philosophy.

ILLNESS OF THE POPE.

Very little information can be obtained regarding the illness of Pope Leo XIII., and the officials of the Vatican uniformly assert that it is of a trifling character. Their statements, however, are not fully credited in view of the unusual movement of the Vatican, and the receipt of a deluge of dispatches from cardinals and other prelates in various parts of the world.

Wheeler's Tissue Phosphates.

Gout an rheumatism are inflammations of the joints and muscles from blood poisoning by uric acid, the brick dust deposit found in the urine dyspeptics, an error of nutrition from a failure of conversion of the nitrogenized or tissue food into healthy blood. There is no specific cure, the aim being to secure digestion and assimilation, and arrest the formation of the blood poison. WHEELER'S PHOSPHATES AND CALISAYA being the best remedy we have for stomach troubles. It is at once evident why it has proved of so great value in these diseases.

E. county, was running to his house when he was caught in the mouth by a fine wire which was stretched across his path The speed with which he was going at the time caused the wire to make an ugly cut in each corner of the mouth. The wire then dropped back of his teeth bearing three or four of them from his mouth in his fall.

Every Man and Woman will disagree upon some points. It is almost impossible to quite reconcile one's convictions with those of another, though, of course, exceptions occur; and one of the most notable which we can mention is that on the corn question. For once our people are united; they acknowledge that never in the history of the world was there as certain, as sure, as harmless, as prompt a remedy as Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor, and for once a united and free people have reached a sensible conclusion. Beware of substitutes.

BROKE HIS NECK.

On Monday evening William Nelles, a farmer living in Nassagaweya, four miles from Acton, came to his end in a peculiar manner. He was thawing out the pump, using a hot iron rod to melt the ice. To try the handle he took hold of it and bore down forcibly, when the handle gave way, his feet slipped and he fell upon the back of his neck striking the edge of the platform, which at this part was considerably raised. He never spoke afterwards. His neck was broken.

None More Able.

The Christian Union published the following opinion of the able lecturer, Dr. Sexton:

"There is no living man more thoroughly able to grapple with Scepticism as it has been developed in the 19th century than Dr. Sexton. He has an amount of practical experience in the ways of doubt, and the things to which doubt leads, that makes him doubly competent to deal with the great and pressing questions of the day."

A High Compliment.

We are pleased to state that Mr. Andrew Wilson, of Peterborough, insurance agent, has won the first prize (a gold watch worth $200) offered by the North American Life Assurance Company to the agent doing the largest business for the company. Mr. Wilson was counted worthy of the prize, which he now wears, with the following inscription, "Presented to Andrew Wilson, special Agent of the North American Life Assurance Company, in recognition of his services to the company, Jan. 19th, 1885." The presentation took place in Toronto, at the Rossin House. We heartily congratulate the successful prize winner.

Striking Out for Himself.

Mr. W. R. Watson, who was for many years in the employ of Mr. John Erskine, Hunter street, and more recently in that of Mr. J. C. Turnbull, George street, has purchased the stock-in-trade of Mr. Thomas Webb, merchant, Brighton, and left on Tuesday morning to assume the duties of conducting the business. Mr. Watson is a young gentleman of first-class business abilities, acquired in a long experience. His previous employers have found him entirely competent and trustworthy, and the people of Brighton are to be congratulated in acquiring in Mr. Watson a pushing business man and a citizen who will do credit to his adopted home, in both capacities.

We advise all who can do so to hear Dr. Sexton. Christian Guardian.

Entertainment.

St. Luke's Temperance Society will hold another of their popular concerts on Monday evening next, the 2nd of February, in the School Room, Ashburnham. The programme will, as usual, be an excellent one, and the admission fee remains the same, only ten cents. Concert to commence at 8 p.m.

An Oregon Snow Storm.

A letter received from Mr. James Elliott, Oregon, states that that country has been visited by a severe snow storm, the snow falling to the depth of 2½ feet, and many cattle are starving. Mr. Elliott, however, foresaw the storm and made provisions against it by erecting a huge stack of straw. When building it he was laughed to scorn by his neighbors, like Noah when building the ark, but after the deluge of snow, the scoffers were very glad to get a load of straw from him to keep their cattle from starving.

Cock Fighting.

On Wednesday night last week a number of sporting men accompanied with fighting cocks concealed in hat boxes, arrived here and meeting a similar collection of sporting men from town, held a cocking main in a barn in the southern part of the town. Twelve battles were fought, the local birds winning nine. The visitors had backed their birds with great confidence, and were therefore financially embarrassed at the wind up. It is shameful that such a cruel sport should be allowed in a civilized community.

New Citizens for Peterborough.

In referring to the marriage of Mr. W. Daly and Miss Burton, of Napanee, a notice of which appears in the usual place in this issue, the Napanee Beaver says:—"They will settle in Peterborough, and we can heartily recommend them to the highest esteem of the people of that place. In the removal of Miss Burton the choir of the Eastern Methodist Church suffers a severe loss." We can add, from personal knowledge, that Mr. Daly is an excellent baritone, so that our new citizens will be a valuable addition to the musical circles of a town the richest, perhaps, in musical resources of any town of its size in Ontario.

Egypt and the Nile.

On Thursday evening last the Town Hall, Ashburnham, was well-filled to listen to a most excellent and interesting lecture given by Rev. T. W. Paterson on the subject of "Egypt and the Nile." The views of objects of interest in this inexhaustible mine of antiquarian relics were very fine, and the descriptive address accompanying them was very apt and entertaining. A most interesting feature of the views was a large map of the Nile, showing the places which, on account of the stirring and momentous events occurring thereon, were studied with peculiar interest. The lecture was extremely entertaining, and the large audience felt itself amply repaid for its attendance.

Let Us Crow!

At the annual exhibition of the Ontario Poultry Society held in Guelph last week the following exhibitors of poultry from Peterborough, and the only exhibitors from this vicinity, scored successes: Mr. John McClelland took second prize on Light Brahma cockerel, and first prize on Buff Cochin hen; Mr. James Baptie, Springville, first prize on Golden-Spangled Hamburg pullet. ann first on Plymouth Rock hen. Bat Mr. N. Lush, Aylmer street, swept the field. He took four first prizes on Langshans—on cock, hen, cockerel and pullet. He also won the silver medal offered for Langshans. Mr. Lush's success is something worth crowing over, as a sequel to other successes, for he led the prize list in Langshans at the exhibition of the same Society held in Toronto last winter, and also secured several prizes at the Industrial Exhibition in Toronto last fall.

Methodist Mission Services.

On Sunday last the Methodists of Peterborough held their anniversary services. There were sermons as follows: In the morning Rev. Benj. Longley, of Ottawa, preached in George-street Church from the text found in St. John's Gospel, iv., 35 and 36 v., and in the evening in the Charlotte-street Church, from Isaiah xvi., 12 v. Both sermons were eloquent efforts, and fully met the high expectations the reverend gentleman's reputation had led the congregations to hold. In the morning Rev. Dr. Sutherland, Missionary Secretary, preached in the Charlotte-street Church on the subject of the miracle of the feeding the five thousand, and in the evening in the George Street Methodist Church from the text found in Romans xi., and part of v. 36. Both discourses were marked by fervour, eloquence and scholarly polish, and were magnificent pulpit deliverances. On Sunday afternoon, in George-street Church, was held a missionary service for the children of the united George and Charlotte street Sunday Schools. The former contributed 400 pupils, and the latter 230. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Messrs. Longley, Manning and Tovell. The choirs of the two churches were also united for the occasion, and the singing was therefore a particularly pleasant feature of the afternoon service. The collections and subscriptions to the mission fund amounted to: George street, about $300; Charlotte street, $370.

The Great Carnival.

Thousands upon thousands of people from all parts of the continent are going to the Montreal Carnival at the end of January. We hear the Montreal Daily Star is bringing out a magnificent Carnival number, something that will eclipse in artistic merit and absorbing interest every illustrated paper heretofore issued in this country. It will have the attack on the ice-palace and defence by the Garrison in all its magnificent pomp and brilliancy; the tobogganing-fete in its true beauty; the Ice-Condora after the Egytian models, inaugurated with electric and pyrotechnic illuminations; the mammoth ice lion (British); the great sleigh drive, embracing thousands of superb equipages, and probably the grandest thing of the kind of modern times; the fancy dress entertainments, true to nature; and a magnificant inset-plate of the ice-palace in tints—a fine picture for framing. It will be remembered that there was a tremendous furore over the last year's Carnival number of the Montreal Star, the issue running up near a quarter of a million. It is said that this year's number will be far ahead of last. The artists are Bengough, Julian, Harris and Haberer. The writers, George Murray, John Reade, Dr. Beers, "Adirondack" Murray, and W. H. Turner. Grip sends for production in the Carnival Star a double page which is said to be the most side splitting cartoon ever published in this country. Fifteen cents in stamps sent to the publishers, Graham & Co, Montreal, will secure a copy of what is said to be the greatest illustrated paper ever issued in this country.

Successful Social.

A delightful social was held under the auspices of the Mission Band of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, on Tuesday night, at the residence of Wm. Hamilton, Esq. There was an excellent musical programme, and the large number present enjoyed the liberally extended hospitality of their host. Proceeds, $20.

Important Real Estate Transfer.

At the sale of the estate of the late Geo. C. Rogers, held on Thursday last, the property included was purchased by Mr. Geo. A Cox for the sum of $42,000. The estate consisted of the Otonabee Flouring Mills and a large amount of miscellaneous real estate. Under its new ownership it may be expected that the resources of the property will receive the fullest possible development.

No Meeting.

On Tuesday night the date of the adjourned meeting of the Town Council, our corporate ancestors were not in a legislating mood. There were ten members present, but most of them folded their tents like the Arabs, and silently stole away—in ones, twos and threes, till only Mr. McNaughton and two or three others were left, the former very properly protesting strongly against the folly of meeting and doing nothing. The reporters held an indignation meeting and passed resolutions of condolence.

Light and Health.

On Thursday night last Dr. Bell lectured in the Y. M. C. A. Hall on the "Sanitary Influence of Light." While giving a large amount of general information respecting the important part played by light in the economy of nature, Dr. Bell showed how great an effect a beneficial kind light had as a remedial agent in the treatment of disease. The lecture was interesting and practical, and was listened to with great attention. Dr. Fife occupied the chair, and returned thanks to the lecturer.

Church Social.

On Monday evening a delightful social gathering under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the George street Methodist church was held in the lecture rooms. Refreshments were served to a large number of visitors, followed by a fine programme of music, addresses and recitations, to which Mrs. Duff, Miss Dame, Miss Fanning and Mr. Holden contributed. Rev. Mr. Longley and Dr. Sutherland gave short addresses, the former also reciting "The Battle of Naseby." The financial outcome amounted to about $75.

The days of the Institute are holidays in the schools, and all teachers are expected to be present during the whole time.

Another Bachelor in Bond.

On Monday morning, Rev. Father Conway joined in marriage at St. Peter's Cathedral, Mr. Geo. Giroux, clerk of the Trent Valley Canal works office, and secretary of the Peterborough Lacrosse Club, and Miss Clara, youngest daughter of the late Thomas Leonard. Mr. W. A. Morrow supported Mr. Giroux on the happy occasion, and Miss Leonard, sister of the bride, acted as bridesmaid. The bride was the receipient of many handsome presents, and Mr. Giroux, the evening before, was presented by the Lacrosse Club with a beautiful marble clock and a complimentary address, at once a testimonial to Mr. Giroux's services as secretary of the club, and a godspeed to the happy couple on the interesting occasion of their marriage. The bridal pair went east on the O. & Q. on their honeymoon tour. Our best wishes follow them on the longer, and we trust, more pleasant matrimonial journey on which they have embarked.

"In and About Jerusalem."

There was a fair-sized audience in the lecture room of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church on Monday evening to listen to a lecture on Jerusalem and its environs, by Rev. Mr. Burnfield, of Brockville, who detailed in a most graphic and interesting manner the journey from Joppa to Jerusalem, and gave most interesting descriptions of the inhabitants of the country and of the many place of interest to every reader of the Bible. A rich current of quaint, quiet humour, varied with frequent glows of vigorous, earnest eloquence ran through the address. Speaking the language of the country, the lecturer had acquired a minuteness of information not accessible to the ordinary traveller, and his terse and racy manner of recounting it made his lecture an intellectual treat of uncommon excellence. Mr. Burnfield while in the Holy Land devoted much time to the investigation of topographical problems, which have set Oriental writers by the ears, and his conclusions, and the reasons therefor, presented many new and original contributions to the topography of places of sacred interest "in and about Jerusalem." The lecture was intensely interesting and was listened to throughout with the most unremitting attention.

People who reside or sojourn in regions of country where fever and ague and bilious remittent fever are prevalent, should be particularly careful to regulate digestion, the liver and the bowels, before the approach of the season for the periodic malady. AN EXPLANATION.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

In view of the manner in which my character and position have been misrepresented, permit me to state that my non de plume of "Laicus" (a layman), appended to the close of each and all of my letters, sets forth clearly and unmistakably what I precisely represent; that no consent of superior was sought or received; that no interference or connection obtained from that quarter in any degree; that with the exception of one brief quotation, furnished by a friend, no person whatsoever, whether priest, bishop or otherwise, has supplied or dictated to me one solitary line or word of my entire argument; that the work in behalf of a middle state was wholly my own—began and completed on my own undivided motion and responsibility; that I am abundantly able to help myself without any outside assistance; that the attempt to make me represent what I do not is significant and speaks for itself; that the suggestion that my opponent was a parson and not a layman, (not denied, by the way), was intended solely to present a naked truth prejudicial to no one; that I am "conscious of having a" true and solid cause,—a fact sufficiently evidenced even by the "limited experience and capacity," which only I claimed for myself at the outset; that I cordially invite a critical comparison of middle state letters pro and con; and that to quash the "anxiety to hide" allegation, I am prepared to supply any necessary proof of my statements herein, call for the genuine name of my opponent, and hereby subscribe myself,

THE PLACE FOR A SUMMER HOTEL.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

DEAR SIR,—The people of Lakefield, with commendable enterprise, intend to erect a summer hotel at Lakefield. But while they are at it why not purchase the Burleigh Falls Hotel? I understand that Mr. Holmes, the present proprietor, would sell his hotel and be willing to take stock in the hotel, under its new proprietorship, as an equivalent for part of the price. The advantages of the Burleigh Falls Hotel are many. Good hunting and fishing are within easy reach. It seems to be the most desirable place for a resort for summer visitors who do not wish to limit themselves to looking at each other in lieu of any other amusement. The fishing, hunting, water and air are all first-class within easy reach of the Burleigh Falls Hotel. The conditions are all in its favour, and I as one interested, being a frequent summer visitor, would like to see it selected by the Lakefield company.

Yours truly,
TOURIST.

THE CROWNING CARNIVAL.

The Foresters' Frosty Fete a Signal Success.

The carnival held in the skating rink on Friday evening last was a magnificent success, and, to use a turf term, "distanced" anything in its line ever attempted here. It was the first of a series to be held by the Foresters of Court Peterborough, and their efforts on this occasion met with the signal success that invariably marks their undertakings. The attendance of spectators was exceedingly large, over a thousand being present. The immense extent of gallery was crowded, and every other point of view occupied, the two curling rinks adjoining the skating rink being well crowded. The rink itself was beautifully decorated. The pillars were transformed into columns of evergreens thickly studed with miniature British and American flags, which hung side by side in international amity. Overhead were stretched festoons of evergreens, and the rails of the galleries were blazoned with patriotic, Forester and curling mottoes. The number of masquers present was nearly 150, and when these gathered on the ice for the opening quadrille with their myriad varieties of bright hued costumes, evirroned by the ornamentation of the evergreens and illuminated by the blaze of half a dozen electric lights, the spectacle was a grand and beautiful one The costumes were, most of them, very appropriate to the characters taken. The list of prizes given below pretty well accords with public opinion as to the best characters on the ice. Below will be found a complete list of masquers and characters alphabetically arranged:

THE PRIZES:

Upon the judges' stand, a bower of bunting—composed of flags and carpeted with furs—were the following judges:—Mesdames C. A. Wellar, Geo. Stethem and Kirkpatrick and Miss Haultain, Messrs. R. S. Davidson, H. LeBrun, Robert Hall and Wm. Van-Every. The following were the awards of the judges:

BEST DRESSED LADY IN COSTUME.—Mrs. G. Dunsford, "Statue of Minerva."

BEST DRESSED GIRL IN COSTUME.—Miss A. Halliday, "Kate Greenaway."

BEST DRESSED GENTLEMAN IN COSTUME.—Mr. Robert Sailsbury, "Richard III."

BEST DRESSED BOY IN COSTUME.—Master Tommy Delaney, "Cupid."

BEST COMIC COSTUME.—Kenneth Kincaid, "Douro Dude."

BEST DRESSED FORESTER.—Mr. F. E. Perry, "Robin Hood."

The fun for the boys consisted of a race around the rink, five laps, won by James Wallbrook, and a barrel race won by Frank Larone.

The Fire Brigade Band supplied at liberal intervals the splendid music for which they are so noted, introducing now and then vocal selections with a very good effect.

The refreshment rooms managed by Mr. T. Darcy, contained a good supply of good refreshments and were well patronized.

The Foresters are to be congratulated on the success of their first carnival; every member of the committee worked energetically, and the great success was a well earned reward. The second carnival of the series will be held in about three weeks, and such special attractions will be offered that the simple announcement in due time will crowd the rink to repletion.

TAKING STOCK!

No duty devolving upon the business man is so pertinent as that of Taking Stock. Books have been called the merchant's repeating clock, to tell him how he goes on. By "Taking Stock" and a comparison with his books, the trader is enabled to arrive at a reasonable computation of the business done during the year, and to tell whether the balance on the pages of his ledger shall be for or against him. It is not only the recognized duty of the active tradesman to "take stock" of his goods, his trade, his custom, but of his competitors.

Just now it is the manifest duty of our citizens to "take stock" of our newly elected Town Councillors to see what are the indications as to the filling in of Spaulding's Bay.

The universal application of the rule is shown in the particularity with which young ladies 'take stock' of prospective matrimonial chances.

In short—tradition, business usage, custom, convenience, and other good and sufficient reasons all corroborate the advisability of "Taking Stock."

This is the month we "take stock," and the balance of our WINTER GOODS will now be cleared out AT COST.

TOWN COUNCIL.

The Call of the South Monaghan Deputation.

A special meeting of the Town Council was held in the Council Chamber on Thursday afternoon. Present,—His Worship Mayor Cox in the chair, Messrs. Cahill, McNaughton, Kelly, Green, McClelland, Yelland, Douglass, Rutherford, Menzies and Hartley.

After routine, the Mayor explained that the chief business for which the meeting was called was to hold a conference with a deputation representing South Monaghan, in reference to adopting means to secure more intimate commercial relations between the town and that township. The meeting was also called for general business.

On motion the general business was proceeded with.

A large number of communications and several accounts were presented and referred to the proper committees.

The deputation appointed consisted of the members of the Council, Messrs. Riddel, reeve, and David Baxter, Lewis Byers, Wm. Dawson and Robert Nurse, councillors, and Messrs. John Thom, Wm. Rutherford, John Bucklen, J. W. Lucas, Wm. Emberson, Jos. Fisher, John Lightfoot, John Smith, Martin Parker, Wm. Robinson, Jas. Wood, Wm. McAllister, John Muncey, Joseph Wood and Alfred Dawson, most of whom were present.

Mr. Riddell, Reeve, had not arrived from Cobourg where the Council of the United Counties was sitting, having been delayed by the trains. Pending his arrival, a telephone message having been received by a gentleman present, stating that he was on his way, it was decided to hear from other members of the deputation.

Mr. Byers said the deputation had come to see if arrangements could not be made for closer trade relations. They wanted to get a grant to erect a bridge at Ross's or some other suitable point, which he thought would be for the advantage of both town and township.

Mr. Cox—Have you any idea of the cost of the necessary bridge?

Mr. Byers—I have not.

Mr. Cox—Has your Council discussed the subject, and what is it proposed to do?

Mr. Byers stated that the sum of $1,100—which could be increased to $1,500—had been subscribed, and the township was willing to give a like amount. If the town of Peterborough would contribute a similar amount he was sure that a good grant could be got from Northumberland and Durham. He thought the cost of the bridge would be fully $8,000.

Mr. Rutherford of South Monaghan, stated that there were at present standing in good order the piers used for a former wooden bridge, which might be used for a new bridge. He thought the township would contribute $3,000, and if the town did as well Northumberland and Durham might be counted on for $2,000, and he thought the aggregate amount thus made up would build the bridge. He thought the prospect of a municipal union was at present not to be expected. The difference in the rate of taxation would prove an insurmountable obstacle. He hoped the town would take a favourable view of the application of the deputation and join in the undertaking.

Mr. Menzies, councillor, favored the building of the bridge, which he thought would be of mutual advantage. He asked Mr. Fitzgerald, deputy-reeve of Smith, who was present, if the matter had been before the County Council for consideration?

Mr. Fitzgerald replied that it had not, and was afraid that the Council would not see the benefit of the bridge so clearly as others did. He thought, however, if the affair were presented in a proper light that its co-operation could be secured.

Mr. Cox inquired why the bridge might not be made an inter-county bridge? Would not the counties then be compelled to build it?

Mr. Fitzgerald supposed they would.

Mr. Cahill moved, seconded by Mr. McClelland, that this Council is willing to co-operate with the municipalities of the township of South Monaghan, or any other municipalities or parties interested in the construction of a bridge across the Otonabee river, or to construct a road along the valley of the Otonabee river, and that the Mayor and Councillors Kelly, McClelland, Rutherford and Menzies be a committee to wait on the County Council, in conjunction with the South Monaghan deputation, with a view to securing their co-operation in the opening up of the said communication between the town of Peterborough and the township of South Monaghan.

Mr. McClelland, in seconding the motion, said he would willingly co-operate. He thought the cost of the bridge would be near $10,000.

Mr. Rutherford (town) said it was unfortunate for both parties that South Monaghan had not some definite scheme to propose.

[At this point Mr. Riddell arrived, and while he was resting after his journey the general business of the Council was resumed, the South Monaghan deputation meanwhile retiring to a committee room for consultation.

THE NICHOLLS HOSPITAL.

The Mayor said he wished to read an important communication that had just been put into his hands. It was as follows:—

PETERBOROUGH, Jan. 29, 1885.

To the Mayor and Council of the Town of Peterborough:

GENTLEMEN,—I beg to submit to you a proposition for the establishment of a hospital, to be maintained by your corporation and that of the County of Peterborough. With this object in view I have purchased the property known as "Moira Hall." I am prepared to convey it, completely furnished together with that portion of land now fenced off as an appurtenant to it, to the two corporations jointly, on condition that they will maintain it efficiently as a hospital, that it shall be for the exclusive benefit of christians of all Protestant denominations, and that it be called the "Nicholls Hospital."

I further agree that, as soon as the necessary arrangements are completed by the two corporations for placing the hospital in order for the reception of patients and for its management, I will pay over to the two corporations as an endowment, the sum of $16,000, the interest upon which shall be used for the maintenance of the hospital.

Trusting this proposition will receive your favorable consideration.

I am, Gentlemen,
Your obedient Servant,
CHARLOTTE J. NICHOLLS.

Mr. Cahill said that while he was glad to see the town made the beneficiary of so munificent a gift, he would like to point out that the conditions presented a difficulty to its receiving a general support. A large number, by these conditions, were excluded from the benefits, and it could not be expected that these should contribute by way of taxes.

Mr. Rutherford said the difficulty might be got over by a special rate on Protestants.

Mr. Poussette explained that Mrs. Nicholls did not so much wish to exclude Catholics as to maintain the hospital under Protestant management. He thought the conditions might be so modified as to make them satisfactory to Roman Catholics.

Mr. Cahill wished to be understood as recognizing the liberal offer made. He only wished to point out the difficulty he had mentioned. He was glad the offer was made, and God forbid that he should place anything in the way of its full acceptance.

Mr. Kelly said the offer was a generous one, and pointed out that the Roman Catholic institutions that received government aid, were open to both Catholic and Protestant alike.

After some further discussion and congratulation, Mr. Menzies moved, seconded by Mr. Kendry, that the thanks of this Council be and are hereby tendered to Mrs. Nicholls for the handsome gift proposed to be given to the Town of Peterborough, and that the clerk of this Council be instructed to transmit a copy of this resolution to Mrs. Nicholls.—Carried.

On motion the matter was referred to a committee to confer with a joint committee of the County Council.

FINANCE.

Mr. Cahill, for Mr. Davidson, Chairman, presented the report of the Finance Committee, recommending the payment of the following accounts:—

R. Kingan	$ 3 25
Dickson Estate	588 86
Lockhart & Chowen	86 50
John Halpin	14 25
E. B. Edwards	113 37

Report adopted.

CHARITY.

Mr. Green presented a return for the Charity Committee, showing that for the year ending Jan 17th, 1885, there had been granted orders for goods, wood, and cash to the amount of $430.05.

SERRET METAL.

Mr. Cahill, Chairman, presented the report of the Street Committee, recommending that the stone piled on McDonnel street be broken for roads, at the rate of seventy cents per square yard.—Carried.

Mr. McNaughton denounced the practice of employing strangers at cutting ice, when many poor ratepayers were out of employment.

THE TOWN CLOCK.

Mr. Kelly moved, seconded by Mr. Green, that the Chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee, find out the cost of putting wire netting over the dials of the town clock.

MR. RIDDELL'S REMARKS.

Mr. Riddell said the subject of better communication between the township and town was one of mutual interest. South Monaghan had before informally made known its feelings on the subject at the time of the Harvest Festival. It was inexpedient, he thought, to go into details at the present stage. By building the proposed bridge more than half of the township would be brought nearer to Peterborough. The distance would be reduced to 7 miles. The bulk of the farmers' produce was grain, and from the part of the township he could speak of from personal knowledge, of the wheat from 10,000 to 12,000 acres, there were only brought to Peterborough last year five loads. The bridge would work an immense change in this respect. The bulk would come to Peterborough instead of going to Port Hope and Cobourg. The people of the township, as well as of the town, would be benefitted by closer trade relations. The deputation suggested that the Town of Peterborough give an equal amount with South Monaghan—not over $3,000. Then we would try the County Councils of Peterborough and Northumberland and Durham. The full length of the required bridge would be 1300 feet—400 feet of river, and 900 feet of marsh land which would have to be filled. The old abutments were in the river as good as ever. The bridge at Ross's could be built as good as the Young's Point bridge at $17 per foot.

Mr. Douglass,—How much did the old bridge cost?

Mr. Riddell,—About $4,000, but it was of wood.

Mr. Kelly,—Who would be responsible for the maintenance of the bridge?

Mr. Riddell replied that Monaghan would come in for a good share of it.

Mr. Menzies,—How much would you have to pay for the old piers?

Mr. Riddell replied, about $100 or $150.

In reply to Mr. Cahill, Mr. Riddell stated that the bridge would shorten the distance to town by about five or six miles. He again strongly urged the importance to the town of more intimate trade relations with a township whose assessment was $650,000.

Mr. James Stratton was invited to give his opinion on the subject. After comparing the advantages of different routes, he pronounced in favor of the road that would by the building of Ross's bridge lead directly to the middle of the township. He thought the bridge at the point named would cost $12,000. He strongly recommended that South Monaghan be co-operated with in promoting the success of the object aimed at, which might ultimately result in South Monaghan becoming a part of this County.

Councillor Cahill's motion re the joint committee was agreed to, and the council adjourned till Monday night.

ADJOURNED MEETING.

The town council met on Monday evening last, 2nd of February. Present councillors Cahill, Davidson, McNaughton, Kelly, Green, Yelland, Douglas, Menzies, Kendry, Hartley and Rutherford.

In the absence of His worship the Mayor, Councillor Menzies was voted to the chair.

The minutes of last meeting were read and confirmed.

THE LATE DYNAMITE EXPLOSIONS.

AFTER EFFECTS OF THE OUTRAGES.

LONDON, Jan. 28.—It is reported that in the eastern portion of London, attacks have been made on Irishmen as a result of the feeling brought about by the explosions. Many of them have been beaten in the streets at night. The feeling of animosity against the Irish is spreading. The police have been ordered to prevent outrages if possible.

A man writes to a paper here offering to equip a steam yacht to raid the United States and kidnap O'Donovan Rossa and Patrick Ford. He pledges himself to capture both and hang them at the execution dock within three weeks after sailing from England.

It is rumoured that the police have just arrested a woman who was in the act of entering the Royal Exchange with a quantity of dynamite concealed on her person. The rumour adds that three men, who were probably accomplices, were arrested at the same time.

MIGHTY AWAKENING.

"Behold, I will send my messenger and he shall prepare the way before me; and the son, whom you seek, shall suddenly come to his temple."—Malachi, iii., 1.

Sometimes a minister's subject is suggested by his artistic tastes, sometimes by the events of the previous week, sometimes by the question of a parishioner. My subject this morning comes in no such way, but straight from the throne of God into my own heart. Give me your prayerful and intense listening. I will show you, if the Lord shall help me, that the greatest need of the church and of the world at this time is a spiritual awakening. An ox feeding in a pasture might conclude that the whole world is a clover field, and we, standing in the midst of great religious advantages, might think that all the world is evangelized; but if this platform were the world, so much of it as I cover with my right foot would represent the amount evangelized, or if this whole church were the world, then one pew would represent so much of it as is gospelized. While I am just as certain as there is a God that the whole world is finally to be saved, and that as the world began with a garden so it is going to close with a garden, I am just as certainly impressed with the fact that there needs to be radical change and that the Church of God needs to get on some other tack. In the present way the thing can never be accomplished. I will show you this morning, as God may help me, that nothing will ever achieve this result but one mighty and universal awakening. This is not an abstraction. The first chapter of the Christian church opens with the account of a revival in which three thousand people joined the church in one day. Would it not have been better to have gone more gradually into the work and had the three thousand souls scattered over three thousand years? or have only too converted in one year, so that it might last for fifteen hundred years—and everything be done deliberately? Peter did not think so. Christ did not think so. The day of Pentecost was nothing but a revival. And so the last chapter of the world's history is to be the history of a revival. Not ten thousand people converted, or a million people converted, but a nation born in a day. The milleunium is only another name for a revival. So in later ages of the church, a great awakening came when Robt. M'Cheyne preached at Dundee and Scotland was shaken, and when Richard Baxter preached at Kidderminster and England was shaken, and Geo. Whitfield crossed the ocean and America was shaken. There are those of you who can remember 1831. It was a great time of commercial depression this country and the shops were closed, and banking institutions failed, and the whole land was in sadness, and two men appeared at the door of Chatham-street Theatre—one of the worst and most blasphemous theatres of those days—and asked the privilege of purchasing the building for a church, and the lease said, "For what?" "For a church." He said, "You can have it, and I will give you a thousand dollars toward it myself." It was opened and at the first prayer meeting eight hundred people were present, and the bar-room was turned into a prayer-room. The first man that began to pray in the bar-room, after it was brought to Christian service, said: "Oh, Lord, Thou knowest that the last time I was here, I came to take part in a blasphemous and unclean play. Now I come to pray thy blessin." Mr. Finney preached seventy nights, seventy consecutive nights in that place, and the whole land was shaken. Aye, more of us can remember 1857. All the banks of New York, or nearly all of them, closed, the commercial houses going down with a terrible crash, a time of anxiety such as I have never seen in this country. Then the engine houses and theatres were opened for religious service, and James Hall prayer meeting at noonday, Philadelphia, telegraphed greeting to the noonday prayer meeting at New York, and the answer went back, and in my village home I waited for the morning newspapers with great and profound interest, wondering what had been done the day before in religious circles. Four hundred thousand entered the Kingdom of God, and some say seven hundred thousand. Those times are coming again, my brethren. We have the same forerunner, commercial depression. We have the same anxiety on the part of Christian people, who realise that something is to be done, that this world can never be brought to God by this slow process, and that there must be a great awakening.

I argue the need of a great awakening in the first place, because of the lack of enthusiasm and zeal on the part of those of us who preach the Gospel. You see this is a gun that kicks. Let the pulpit first preach to itself and then to the pew. Twenty-eight years ago, in the village church, I knelt, and ten or twelve excellent ministers of religion put their hands on my head and set me apart for the holy ministry, and I declare to you to-day, as I look back, I have two emotions—one of gratitude to God, and the other of the deepest dissatisfaction with myself. The field has been so wide, the opportunity has been so magnificent. I have done so little compared with the work I ought to have done. And then I remember that I had such a starting. Those of you who have read the congratulatory letters of this last week remember that Dr. Chambers, of New York, who was her pastor, says in that letter that my mother was the Godliest woman he had ever known. Though my early home was plain and my father and mother were plain people, they lived close up to God, and nobody ever doubted where they went when they died. Oh, I had a glorious starting, and when I think of the opportunities I have had for usefulness I am annoyed that I have done so little. It is in no feeling of cant that I express it, but with deep and unfeigned emotion before God. Oh, it is a tremendous thing to stand in a pulpit and know that a great many people will be influenced by what you say concerning God, or the soul, or the great future. Suppose a man asks of you the direction to a certain place, and you, through carelessness, thoughtlessly tell him the way, and you hear after a while he got lost upon the mountains and went over the rocks and perished. "Oh," you say, 'I'll never forgive myself that I didn't take more time with that man. It was my fault. If I had given him the right direction, he would have gone the right way." And oh, the greater responsibility of standing in a pulpit and telling people which is the way to heaven. Alas! if we tell them wrong. The temptation is so mighty in this day that no layman could understand it—the temptation is so mighty in this day to smooth down the truth and hush up the alarms of the Gospel, and pat men on the shoulder, and sing them on down towards the last plunge, and tell them they are all right. Or, as the poet has put it:

"Smooth down the stubborn text to ears polite
And simply keep damnation out of sight."

What is the use of telling men they are all right when they know they are not all right? Oh, brothers in the ministry—for there are many in our audience—brothers in the ministry, we cannot afford to hold back any of the truth, and we cannot afford to lack in earnestness! If you fail in this, my brethren, you had better stand away from them in the last day; you had better stand away from that soul that you have neglected, lest he tear you to pieces. He will say to you, "I admired your philosophic disquisitions and your beautiful gestures and your finely formed sentences, multiform, and stelliform and curvilinear, but you never helped prepare me for this judgment day. Cursed be your rhetoric. I am going down now and I am going to take you with me. Witness all ye hosts of light and all ye hosts of darkness, it is his fault." And many worlds come up chorus, saying: "His fault, his fault!" Oh my brethren in the ministry, we ought to preach as though standing in the pulpit we felt that beneath us were the bursting graves of the resurrection morn, and as though above us were the myriads of Heaven looking down upon us ready to applaud our fidelity or hiss at our stolidity, while coming through the Sabbath air were the long, deep groans of the dying nations that are never dead. Oh, that God with a torch would set all the pulpits of England, Scotland, Ireland and America afire. If God will forgive me for the past, I will do better in future.

Oh, what pulpits we will have, and what prayer-meeting circles we will have, what fields of usefulness we will have, what Sunday school classes when we get our message direct from the throne. Rev. Samuel Kennedy, an eminent minister of Christ, preached at Basking Ridge, New Jersey—I have often heard my father tell the story—and that minister of Chirst mourned over the coldness of his church, and he resolved to give one whole week to prayer and to prepare the most wonderful discouse he could possibly prepare. So the whole week was employed and he went into the church, as he though, thoroughly prepared. While they were singing the hymn before the sermon, he turned to the Bible to find the text, but he had forgotten the text and he had forgotten the subject, and when the hymn closed he said, "My dear people, a strange mental accident has happened, and I cannot preach now. You will sing another hymn." And while they were singing another hymn he took his Bible, glancing his eye from page to page, hoping he might strike upon the text and all would come back to him; but ever and anon his eye would strike upon the passage: "The wicked shall be turned into hell and all the nations that forget God." He said: "I cannot preach on that text, it is a dreadful text," and he turned over more leaves and kept on looking, and again his eyes fell on the same passage. "Oh," he said, "I cannot preach on that text." The hymn was finished, and he arose and announced the aforesaid passage as the text, and the place was filled with God, and a great revival of religion was started. My grandfather and my grandmother were brought in under that awakening, a line of influence coming down through our family which had blessed my soul. Oh, these messages that come from the soul directly into the heart! I feel there is a need of a great awakening in the fact that the majorty of professors of religion are very cold. If a church has 1,000 members, eight hundred are asleep, If a church has five hundred members, four hundred are asleep. A great multitude of Christians, perfectly satisfied if they can only keep from dropping the wine cup on communion day, gracefully passing it along to some one else. If there be an important religious meeting on a certain night and that night there be an operatic entertainment of great interest, or there be a literary club, or there be a social circle, or there be an Oddfellows' lodge, or a Freemasons' meeting, and the question is between this and between that, who gets it? Christ or the world? You know, whether you are a professor of religion or not, that the dividing line between the church and the world to-day, is like the equator, or the Arctic or Antarctic circle, a mere imaginary line, and thousands of professed Christians stand discussing the infinitesmial questions: Shall we dance? shall we play cards? shall we go to the theatre? shall we go to the opera? and all these questions when there are five hundred millions of the race marching on toward judgment without any warning. Oh, how much deadwood in all the churches. Oh, what a thinning out the judgment will make among the professors of religion. Thousands going on just touching religion with the tips of the fingers, mustering on and mustering on lazily, until after a while they will come in front of the swiftly revolving mill, and find themselves the chaff which the wind driveth away. Thousands of people who have their names on church books, going on thoughtless of what shall become of the human race, and regardless of the betterment of the world's condition, until after a while they fall off as Judas did, and as Achan did, and all those will who do not make religion the primordial thing of life, the first and the last. Oh, how many there are who do not realise the fact that, though they are professors of religion, if they die as they are, all the communion tables at which they ever sat will with uplifted hands of blood, cry for their condemnation, and their neglected Bible and prayerless pillows will say, "Go down, go down: you broke that sacramental oath; out of the seven days of the week you did not give five hours to God. Go down, go down." Oh, worldly professor of religion, compromising professor of religion, if you realised your true condition this morning, you would bite your lip until the blood came, and you would wring your hands until the bones cracked, and you would utter a cry that would start this whole audience to their feet with horror. Oh, worldly professor of religion, wake up before you wake up in the barred and flaming dungeon of an unending eternity. Look off upon the church to-day, and see how much somnolence, and tell me if I am not right when I say that all the bugles and cymbals and drums and trumpets of the church need to be sounded, saying: "Awake, thou that sleepest, and Christ shall give thee life." Do I not need arousal? Do you not need it? If my heart condemns me does not your heart condemn you, my brother?

I see also the need of a great awakening in the fact that the cause of God advances so slowly, comparatively. I know that there are more Christians to-day than there ever were, and yet the world can never come to God in this way. It is a mathematical impossibility. There are more people born into this world than there are born into the Kingdom of God. Now, how long would it take to bring this world to God at that rate? Where there is one man converted to God, ten drop in dissipation. Fifty grogshops built to one new church established. There are journals, literary journals, full of scum and dandruff and slang, and controlled by the very scullions of society, who pollute everything they put their hands on. Three hundred journals, magazines, newspapers in the city of New York—three hundred—and I undertake to say, two hundred of them are hostiles to the Christian religion and to all good morals. Churches surrendering to Spiritualism and humanitarianism, nothingarianism and devilism. If a man stand in the pulpit and say that unless you are born again you cannot see the Kingdom of God, kid gloves, diamonds bursting through, put up to the face in shame and humiliation. It is not elegant. Men in all churches who do not believe in the Bible in and in and out and out, from the first word of the first verse of the first chapter of Genesis, down to the last word of the last verse of the last chapter of Revelation—mighty gospel machinery. Sixty thousand ministers of religion in America, costly music, great Sunday schools, and yet I declare it that while the cause of God is advancing, there are a great many regiments falling back and falling back, and if it does not become a complete rout, a positive Bull Run defeat, it will be because here and there a church hurls itself to the front and ministers of religion trample upon the favor of the world, and sacrificing everything shall snatch up the torn and tattered banner of Emanuel and push on, crying: "This is no time to retreat—forward the whole line!"

I see, also, a reason for a mighty awakening of the multitudinous going down of the unforgiven. Do you know, since you came on the stage of action, a whole generation have gone through the gates of eternity? They disappeared from the churches, from the stores, from the offices, from the factories. Some of them went out without an item of hope. Some of them never offered one prayer for their own salvation. You might have uttered, perhaps, a saving word, but you did not utter it. Oh, Christian, just think of that. Where is the fountain, where, with sleeves rolled up, we may wash off from our hands the blood of immortal souls? But that forever has ended. The question is now whether we are going to interrupt the other procession marching on—tens of thousands of clerks coming out of stores, tens of thousands of husbandmen coming off farms, tens of thousands of students coming from the colleges and universities, tens of thousands of operatives coming from the factories. On and on, making no preparation for the eternal world, taking everything by storm, capturing all the obstacles put in the way of their destruction. Who will be brave enough to go out and throw himself in front of that stampede of men and women, and swinging the sword of God's truth, cry: "Halt, halt, halt!" Oh, my brothers and sisters in Jesus, it seems to me the time has come for something almost desperate. Ordinary solicitations will not do the work. You want a momentum gotten by a whole night of wrestling in prayer with the omnipotent God. Catch that soul before it makes the plunge. Put down everything and run to the rescue. To-morrow may be too late, to-night may be too late, three o'clock this afternoon may be too late. Seize that soul now, before it flashes into the great eternal world. There are houses aflame and no ladder to the window; there are ships going down and no lifeboat. Oh, God, whelm us with these realities. Kill our stupidity. Take from under us our couches of ease. Hurl us into the battle. An eternity of work to be done in ten years. Aye, perhaps in one year. Aye, perhaps in one month. An eternity of work to be done, perhaps within one week. Aye, within one day. Perhaps within one hour. Perhaps within one minute. Perhaps within one second. This the last. But none drops down, so I think God is going to spare us, spare us to wake up and realise that the great dead of the world is a mighty awakening. I need not rehearse in this place what God has done for the individual church. I need not rehearse the first day we opened, the first communion season, when 328 souls stood up in these aisles and joined the church of God. We have had a great blessing. We are going to have greater. There is one just dawning upon us. As near as I can tell it is about five o'clock in the morning, or six o'clock in the evening. It has just come, it is going to be daybreak. It is daybreak. Ye shall see greater things than these. There is a sound of abundance of rain. This week the Lord Almighty will stretch forth his bare arm. There is a vast multitude who are permanently connected with this church who do not confess the Christian religion. They are among my warmest personal friends. They are among the most liberal supporters of the church. When the time comes next Monday night for the public rental of the pews they will do their very best for the support of all Christian institutions. Some who profess to be Christians might perhaps pride themselves on how little they can do. If I wanted a favor they would be the first men to whom I would go. If prolonged sickness should come to my household they would be the men and women to whom I would ask to come in and I could trust my darling children to them, and whoever might fall asleep that night would be wide awake until the dawn. If I were to make my last will and testament and I had solemn distribution to make with reference to the welfare of my household, they would be the men to whom I would commit everything. Yet they are not Christians. If I would ask them they would tell me they were not. Oh, whose fault is it? Is it mine? I have sometimes thought it was. I have sometimes thought if I had been more earnest in my work they would have come to God long before this. Oh, they have got to be brought in. They are going to come in. I know it. I know it. And then what about the eighty or one hundred thousand strangers who the last twelve months floated in and out this service? How about the eighty or one hundred thousand strangers who will float in and out the service for the next twelve months? Oh, there is going to be a great awakening. If when John Livingston preached the Gospel in his church in Scotland five hundred received the truth in one day, why could not we be enough in prayer to have thousands in a day? It was not John Livingstone that saved them. It was the Holy Spirit that is now abroad. The same Christ comes here who came there. If John Knox could put the lever of his prayer under Scotland until it shook from end to end, can you not get the lever of your prayer under this city and shake everything from the East river to New Utrecht and from New Utrecht to Long Island City? God is ready. In your prayers put your body, mind, soul and eternal destiny into this thing. I need not rehearse to you the stereotyped illustrations of the fact that God answers prayer. I need not tell you of Hezekiah and the restored ——, or of Elijah and the great rain, or of the post-mortem examination of the Apostle James who, it was found, had his knees callouused by much prayer, or of Richard Baxter who stained the walls of his study with the breath of prayer, or of John Welch in the mid-night plaid, or of Whitefield on his face before God whole nights, imploring the divine mercy. I rather turn in upon yourself and have you think of the time when your soul was sinking and you cried to God and He heard you—of the time when your child was at the point of death and you cried to God and he restored the little one—or of that other time when your fotune went, and God sent into your empty pantry the cruse of oil and the measure of meal. Oh, we do not want any illustrations. We just take the ladder of three rungs. I put that down at your feet and I ask you to climb up and look off and see the salvation of ten thousand of your fellow citizens—a ladder of three rungs. "Ask and it shall be given you. Seek and ye shall find. Knock and it shall be opened unto you." Put your right foot on the lower rung and that will bring your left foot on the middle rung, and that will bring your right foot on the top rung, and there hold fast—hold fast until you see the surges of the divine mercy dashing clear above the top-gallants of your ship. My brethren, I do not know how you feel in regard to the matter, but my heart breaks with the longing I have for the redemption of this people. It seems to me if God denies me my prayer I cannot endure it. I offer myself, I offer my life to him. Take it O Lord Jesus, and slay me if that be best. Whether by my life or by my death let a multitude be brought to glory. If from the mound of my grave a greater multitude can climb into the Kingdom of God, then Lord let me sleep the last sleep. It is sweet to live for Christ. I suppose it would be sweet to die for Him. If eight millions perished in the Napoleonic wars, if one hundred and eighty seven millions were sacrificed in the Roman wars, do you not think there ought to be some of us willing to be sacrificed for Christ? Oh, I wish we knew how to pray. I do not. I mean the prayer that always brings the blessing—always, always. Oh, that we might be so overcome with desire for the salvation of the people that from ten o'clock at night until six in the morning we might be sleepless. If such a night as that could come, sleepless because full of prayer, let that be a night of weeping over our sin and rejoicing in the divine mercy. Let there be wailing, wailing, wailing. Let there be shouting, shouting, shouting. But, lest we should not have such a night as that, and lest before the setting of the day's sun our accounts should be made up, let us this moment go so low down before God that there shall be no lower depth of humiliation.

Oh, that we might have a blood red prayer which would bow the heavens and bring all the unforgiven to the feet of a bleeding, dying, sympathetic Jesus, and the place be shaken as with tempest and earthquake, or that it might be as solemn as though we heard the raptures and and agonizing vociferation of three worlds.

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral.

No other complaints are so insidious in their attack as those affecting the throat and lungs: none so trifled with by the majority of sufferers. The ordinary cough or cold, resulting perhaps from a trifling or unconscious exposure, is often but the beginning of a fatal sickness. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL has well proven its efficacy in a forty years' fight with throat and lung diseases, and should be taken in all cases without delay.

A Terrible Cough Cured.

"In 1867 I took a severe cold, which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which relieved my lungs, induced sleep, and afforded me the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continued use of the PECTORAL a permanent cure was effected. I am now 67 years old, hale and hearty, and am satisfied your CHERRY PECTORAL saved me.

HORACE FAIRBROTHER."

Rockingham, Vt., July 15, 1882.

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.

"While in the country last winter my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with croup; he seemed as if he would die from strangulation. One of the family suggested the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was tried in small and frequent doses, and to our delight in less than half an hour the little patient was breathing easily. The doctor said that the CHERRY PECTORAL had saved my darling's life. Can you wonder at our gratitude? Sincerely yours,

MRS. EMMA GUDNEY."

169 West 126th St., New York, May 16, 1882.

"I have used AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL in my family for several years, and do not hesitate to pronounce it the most effectual remedy for coughs and colds we have ever tried. A. J. CRANE."

Lake Crystal, Minn., March 18, 1882.

"I suffered for eight years from Bronchitis, and after trying many remedies with no success, I was cured by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. JOSEPH WALDEN."

Byhalia, Miss., April 5, 1883.

"I cannot say enough in praise of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, believing as I do that but for its use I should long since have died from lung troubles. E. BRAGDON."

Palestine, Texas, April 23, 1883.

No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and it will always cure when the disease is not already beyond the control of medicine.

MR. BLAKE'S GREAT SPEECH

Delivered Before the Young Men's Liberal Club.

THE AIMS OF LIBERALISM.

A Thorough Exposure of Conservative Failure—Our Unfair Fiscal System—How the Tariff Discriminates Against the Poor—The Assisted Passage Grievance—State of the Labour Market in Our Great Cities.

The Government declared in 1882, when they came before you for re-election that the boom which then prevailed was only the beginning of what was to be. They said that what was wanted was, and they came before the people earlier than was actually necessary to make sure of it, that the good times should continue. They wanted the people's endorsation of the policy which had been adopted to secure prosperity for all time. They said that millions of dollars were and if that verdict was favorable to the policy unexampled increases would take place in the money invested in the mines and other industries of the country. In this city the First Minister said:—

"I tell you this, and this is not a matter of supposition but of certainty and knowledge on my part there are millions of dollars waiting to be invested in Canada, millions in England and large sums in the United States waiting to be invested in every kind of industry, in mines and manufactures of every kind. All that is wanted by capitalists in Canada, England, and the United States, and in France and Germany, is to learn whether this country is of the fixed constant opinion that the N. P. shall be continued as settled in 78."

Where are the millions? (Laughter.) Now it seems pretty plain that the millions never came. They said they would give steady employment to labor at fair wages. Our market is small and soon stocked. As I pointed out to you a while ago, instead of opening new markets and instead of the policy being such as to enable you to open new markets, those markets are being closed rather than opened. The export of manufactured goods for the last three years is only about three-fifths of what it was for the three previous years I have been citing as examples. They boasted that they gave such temporary sunshine as there was, that it was due to them and their little Act of Parliament that you were rich and happy as you were. There was no use to point to the condition of free trade England or to that of the United States, where there has been no change in the tariff. There was no use in discussing the causes of action and reaction. I will give, as I have given in the rural parts a figure or two which will show you upon what the prosperity of towns depends—not of the towns alone, not of the country alone, but of both town and country. The farming capital of the Province of Ontario, including about one hundred millions for current capital is one thousand and fifty millions or more. The manufacturing capital is about eighty-one or eighty-two millions. Of this a large proportion is in the saw mills, bakers, flour mills, and other industries which the N. P. does not help, however much it may hurt them. There remains about fifty millions about which there may be a dispute as to whether it hurts or helps. Now, do you believe that it is the prosperity of the fifty millions that is going to help the 1,050,000,000 or will it be the reverse? The larger figure rules, and what we depend upon who live in the towns—I am a city man myself, and interested in everything that advances the welfare of the city—in the prosperity of the country parts which buy our goods. When the farmer has a good crop and good prices for it we profit by it as well as he. (Applause) He buys the goods that we import or manufacture; he makes the wheels of trade revolve, and you will notice that the Conservatives themselves in their trade articles and in their leading articles too upon the crops. They were quite right; the crop was the important thing. I wish to show by another set of figures where the prosperity came from. Of the products of the land, in which I include forest land, we exported in 1876-7-8 products to the value of $158,500,000. In 1881-2-3 we exported $211,000,000, an excess of about $53,000,000. That is in the latter period we got four years profits in three years of time. That is enough to make a country prosperous. In the period of depression which the Tories are so fond of saying was the worst in the country's history the people were economising and investing their savings only in the safest possible way. With those savings and with the great addition to our wealth, of which I have told you; we ought to have prosperity. They said we should have it. But they have hindred it instead of bringing it about. It is the undue inflation, the fiscal burdens, the enormous expenditures which these men are responsible for which have curtailed the season of prosperity and have brought about another period of stringency. These men deny it. Sir John Macdonald, the other day in England, you know, where these inconvenient things are said, issued a wholesale invitation to the English people to come out and stay with us. (Laughter.) He said that in Canada any industrious man could obtain a good day's wages for a good day's work. Contrast that statement with what comes to us in the unquestioned reports. Look at the report of the labour organization of Hamilton of last winter:—

"November—Opened with a decreasing demand for labour in almost every branch of productive industry. During the month reductions of the working force were very general, greatly increasing the surplus of labour. General secession from all work on all outdoor branches of labour took place towards the close of this month. Some slight reductions in time and rate of wages were also made and accepted. The month closed with very poor outlook for the winter. Signs of still greater depression were especially evident in the panicky feeling among workingmen, and their determination to curtail expenditure, thus hastening depression by an almost entire falling off in the demand for those manufatures not essential to support life, and the consequent discharge of persons engaged in the manufacture of such goods. This month may be summed up as a poor one for labour, for, although wages were much the same as last month, work was not so steady, and the number out of employment was largely increased.

"December—Opened with a still gloomier outlook for labourers. There were constant rumours of intended reductions of force, pay, and time, many of which proved correct. Among others the iron moulders, one of the strongest and best organized bodies of wage-workers, were out 20 per cent., owing to the depressed condition of labour, they did not resist. This was followed by a wholesale reduction in the force engaged in the iron industry in general and the stove industry in particular, amounting in the aggregate to near 45 or 50 per cent, of the entire force employed during good times. The average wage of cotton operatives was reduced from $10 to $7 per week, which was again followed by an almost universal shut-down or suspension of operations for an idefinite period—on the Saturday immediately before Christmas—with the exception of the boot and shoe, cotton, and glass industries. These continued fairly active, but otherwise the month closed with no demand whatever, for labour of any kind. On the whole the month must be summed up as a very poor and discouraging one for labour. Many honest, hard-working people were compelled to apply for relief, and many letters appeared in the newspapers appealing to the City Council to undertake relief works, and the month may be set down as one of the worst months for labour, if not the worst for many years."

THE TORONTO REPORTS.

Take our own city. What says the report of the Combined Charities for last winter? That report is signed by Messrs. Russell, the Chairman. (Applause and laughter.) He says:—

"The large number of newly arrived and destitute emigrants seeking relief, naturally drew the attention of the Conference to the system prevailing of giving indiscriminately assisted passages at all seasons of the year, and thus flooding Toronto with paupers throughout the long winter season. A memorial was presented to both the Dominion and the Ontario Governments, asking that the practice might be discontinued, at any rate between the months of August and April in each year. Whether any further notice of the communications will be taken by these authorities remains to be seen."

Now hear the report of Mr. Pell, Secretary of Combined Charities, as to the state of affairs this year. He says that the cases for relief this winter were, 1,683, as against 939 up to the same time last year. He adds:—"There are more men out of employment in Toronto now than during any previous year of my residence. St. George's Society assisted to relieve 1,400 persons as against 760 up to 1st December last year." Take another test—the number of vagrants arrested, many of whom come to the police magistrate and want to go to gaol because they can't get any other shelter. In 1882 there were 275; in 1883 the number increased to 330, and in 1884 to 439. Take the waifs—persons who go to the police station for a night's lodging, and are glad to sleep on the floor of a cell because they can't get better accomodation. In 1882 there were 879; in 1883 there were 2,016; and 1884 the number had grown to 4,045. I am glad to say that for the last three months of last year it seems to have been only about the same or perhaps a little better than for the last three months of the year before. We know that this does not disclose the worst cases. We know that the worst and most heart-breaking cases are those that do not meet the public eye. Now, I say that the men who complain because these facts are disclosed are not patriots. (Loud applause.) They say we are unpatriotic because we want to ascertain the

to see whether their policy is successful or not; and to see whether their promises have or have not been fulfilled. What did they do in 1878? On every platform in the country they told of men who had been brought upon the country. No Liberal complained of anything that they said which was true. That is all right. The people are entitled to know the facts. I give you the facts and my authority for them, and I say that these facts, painful as they are, demonstrate that the men who misled you into the belief that by Acts of Parliament and by taxation, they could secure you prosperity, have failed, and that a condition of affairs exists which is deserving of the attentive consideration of the people at large, and which ought to be remedied at the earliest possible moment. (Loud Applause.) I said they told you they would give you steady employment at good wages. Last session when we discussed the facts of the case, they had to some extent to withdraw from the r statements. An important admission was made by the Finance Minister. He said:—

"A year or two ago, as I know and other honorable members know perfectly well, as the prices paid for labor in the United States must regulate the price of labor in Canada, because if the wages are not about equal the operatives will soon pass across the line, our manufacturers found it necessary to increase the wages here when an advance took place in the United States, in order to keep their men; but now that there is a reduction in the United States, owing to reduced prices, our manufacturers, in order successfully to compete, have also to reduce the prices of their products, and in some cases, also, the wages of their operatives."

There is an admission that notwithstanding their Acts of Parliament and their tariff arrangements the labor in the big markets of the United States regulates the market here. If a Liberal had said that—Unpatriotic man! (laughter) you are hinting to the mechanics and laborers of Canada to go across the line and better themselves. Of course a good Tory, like Sir Leonard, could not do such a thing—at any rate, it is not wicked when he does it. (Loud laughter and applause.) Now, as a matter of fact, no matter how we cloak or disguise it, as worked, has aggravated the evil. The Minister of Immigration may tell you that he has issued his rules for this or that. I do not know what those rules are, but it is clear that the Department uses the steamship agents as its agents and these men are paid a commission on the number they send out. I believe that almost anybody who is not actually blind or crippled, who is apparently able-bodied, can get out to Canada on assisted passage. The immigration you want is of a special kind. You want the tenant farmer or the freehold farmer. You want to a certain extent, the immigration of the agricultural labourers. You may want an immigration of domestic servants, if you can keep them. There is a great want of household servants in the country, but immigration will not supply that. The women come from the country to the towns, and from the towns of Canada they go to the larger towns in the United States. The immigration must be so regulated that it shall not tend to aggravate the distress which now exists through the action of the Government. I suppose I should not be so apt to be called unpatriotic if I said with Sir John Macdonald that every industrious man can get in Canada a good day's wage for a good day's work. I can't say that and tell the truth, because I know to the contrary. Every man knows that. The cases of the workingmen to which I have referred prove it. How different was the course of Mr. Mackenzie. He was never afraid to state the truth. (Loud cheers.) He was not afraid to let the people know when it was not expedient that they should come to Canada. On 12th July, 1875, Mr. Mackenzie being then in England, our Agent-General, Mr. Jenkins, wrote a letter to the London Times, in which he said:—

THE SYSTEM OF ASSISTED PASSAGES,

"SIR,—Will you permit me to make, through the columns of the Times, an intimation which may serve to prevent a great deal of disappointment and trouble. The advices, which I have from Canada, both privately and in the press, as well as from gentlemen who have lately arrived from there, show that, in the present state of commerce and trade in the Dominion, and especially at so late a period of the emigration season, it is not advisable to encourage the emigration from this country of artizans, mechanics, clerks, and general labourers to Canada. These persons, arriving in the middle of July or in the beginning of August will find a depressed state of trade and a lack of of general employment, and unless they have extraordinary energy and self-reliance, or sufficient means to sustain themselves for a considerable time, they may find themselves forced to face a Canadian winter with no prospect of employment. To encourage emigration of such persons in such circumstances would be almost criminal, and equally disastrous to the emigrants themselves, and to the interests of Canada."

And so on. Now, there he gave the state of the case as it was: (Loud applause.) He intimated a hope that he would be able to advise immigration at a later time. He got abuse for it. Here is Sir David Macpherson's pamphlet, and in it he pitches into Mr. Mackenzie because he allowed that letter to be written. Could anything be more ill-as vised?" he asks "or exhibits greater ignorance of the field which Canada offers for immigrants! This country is specially adapted for workingmen with large families." He was denouncing Mr. Mackenzie for suggesting that the classes of men named should not come to Canada. That was the then. It is the honest, true state of the case with reference to the mechanic and general laborer to-day, and it is time that the truth should be told. (Applause.) It is better to tell the people there is no room for them, when there really is none, than to have them brought over here only to be disappointed, to leave the country as soon as they can, and to write letters concerning us which will do us more harm by far than the plain, straightforward truth told by ourselves can do. (Great applause.) Even the case of the agricultural laborer is changed by the introduction of improved machinery, notably of the self-binder. A large portion of the labor formerly required is required no longer, and this should emphasize more than ever the view that it is not advisable to pay others to come into the country to share with our own workingmen the labor which is scanty enough already. And will not the members of the Young Men's Liberal Club do good work in impressing these facts upon the consciences of the people. These are facts which require to be brought home to men's minds. If these facts were made familiar to the people it could not be but that a general protest would be made. We have right to be proud of our legislative record with reference to the workingman. We have placed him in a fair position in relation to his employer and the law. We did so in advance of the English legislation. We recognized the fact that it was essential in the interests of labor in its controversies with capital that it should be permitted to organize, and we removed the disabilities which then existed in the way of organizations and combinations. Strikes are evils, and the intelligent workingman recognizes them as such. But sometimes they were necessary evils. To have the right to act as a united body is absolutely essential to labor in these controversies with capital. I should like to have the young men of this Club devote their attentions to other problems also—half social and half legislative in their nature. The question of co-operation in distribution and production is pregnant with importance. You see to what a great extent co-operation in distribution has progressed in England. It has gone beyond the retail societies, and now they have an enormous wholesale institution which supplies the retail societies. The transactions run up into the millions, and if their great experiment succeeds the relations of the laborer to the rest of the world will be almost revolutionized. Familiarity with the topic of co-operation and others of a like character is of the utmost importance to the young Canadian Liberal. We, as legislators, have to do with sanitary laws, educational laws, and with laws for regulating the hours of labor for women and children. And in all I want to say one thing to the young Canadian Liberals and one to the workingmen. I hope the workingman in Canada is not going to be satisfied with a less measure of progress in these important matters than that made in Old England. For eighty years the work of improving the condition of the workingman in these regards has been going on. For eighty years law after law has been passed as experience demonstrated its necessity. On the continent of Europe, also, great progress has been made in a few years. I hope we shall do as well even as they are doing in England. We should be ashamed to be behind them. We ought to be ashamed of such things as a statement made in Parliament, which, when it was made, caused me to be ashamed that such a thing should be said in Canada. A gentleman on the Reform side was pointing out a diminution in the school attendance in Nova Scotia, and was answered by a gentleman on the other side, "Don't you know the reason of that? The and can't go to school." (Applause.) Is that the sort of work we want done in this Canada of ours? Is that the way we expect to elevate the people to true democratic principles? The young must be protected. (Cheers.) They must have time to grow strong and to be educated. England has passed through this stage, and, in the interest of the people, will not allow those things to be done of which this gentleman boasted. There are important questions beyond the pale of law. One is the inculcation of principles of economy and frugality and the spread of the system of keeping accounts among working men. I have before made a practical suggestion, which I wish to repeat. I maintain that in our common schools we ought to teach the children, the great masses of whom are the sons and daughters of farmers, mechanics, and labourers a simple method of keeping the daily accounts of the household or farm. It would be better than going on into advanced rules of arithmetic, which are never used after the person leaves school. (Applause.) Economy and temperance are important questions, which are in your own hands. What I want to see is that mechanics and workingmen should save something—should feel it their duty to save. Once the thing is begun, it is wonderful how you get on. To feel that he has something earned will made the mechanic an independent man, which he is not. For all this I do not except those things which are of a legislative character. There is much in a social and moral question which is beyond the legislative pale, but it is unquestionable that if you can mould your legislation in a more useful and beneficial direction, the higher the social and moral tone. It is not free trade nor is it protection, it is not competition nor is it the absence of it, it is not law in our present state that will do, but the application to our daily lives of the principles of the Gospel is that which we ought to seek in making a country. (Loud applause.) It is the work of slow degrees. I may be called Utopian, but I believe that work is progressing and will progress. It is our duty to set our faces toward it. We shall not reach high unless we aim high. Better aim higher than you expect to reach. With these considerations governing us as a people, legislation impossible and useless heretofore will become possible, and you will find social and moral considerations inextricably intertwine themselves with those of legislation.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

It is too late to discuss the other topic of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I shall not trespass upon your patience. (Go on, go on.) I should rejoice if I could lay my hand on my heart and say I was mistaken, and the policy of the Government would not bring about the results I thought it would. I believe the expenditure, the enormous rapidity with which the work has been put through, the effect upon the North-West, the effect by reflex action upon the rest of Canada could not be considered too serious or grave, and that an attempt is now being made to create a sort of boom in the expectation that you will get your railway finished in the course of a few months, and that a new era of prosperity is about to set in. I wish I could tell you that I think there will be that era of prosperity. I am content that what I said should be recorded, that it should be read, and that in the course of a few short months, and after a year's experience of the road in actual use, you should judge whether I am right or wrong in advising what I did. I feel that the condition of the country is serious. I do not feel that we have cause for despair. I hope never to despair of my country. But we have cause for serious alarm. We ought to endeavour to awake our country from its lethargy. We ought to endeavour to point to the people, as we have been endeavouring, the facts of the case. We ought to endeavour to show them how far performance has come from promise, how woefully it has fallen short. We ought to show the real situation, exaggerating nothing. We should do this, believing that our country will see that a policy of reduced taxation, of readjusted taxation, of economy in administration, of recognition of the federal principle and of Provincial rights; a policy in favour of saving what remains to be saved of the prosperity which might have been ours, is the policy which ought to be adopted; that she will see that the men who now govern her have proved unsafe guides, have proved unjust stewards, and that she will be prepared to remove from them the power which they have abused and to place it in the hands of men who have shown themselves, when they had it, faithful to their trust, and declining, under difficult circumstances, to retain power by beguiling the people. (Loud applause.) Who never said they would achieve for the country prosperity by fiscal policy and declined to endeavour to instruct the people in the doctrine that they could grow rich by taxation, whose thought rather was how to confine the limits of Government within its proper scope, and told the people that upon your labour, intelligently, liberally, industriously, and freely applied, you must depend for your wealth and prosperity. (Cheers.) I trust that this will be the verdict of the country when it shall be called upon. (Cheers.) I trust the Young Men's Liberal Club will do what it can to bring about this result. They have seen this night, I hope, notwithstanding its feeble advocacy, that their cause is good, that the issues are momentuous; the propositions they are to advocate are such as they can maintain on any platform, before any orator, however powerful, that they are propositions in the interests of this country; not the compositions of charlatans who pretend to be able to heal by quack remedies, but of men who point to the true sources of the evil, and give the true remedy, which lies with the people. And so may I not exhort them:—

"From on! the triumph shall be won,
Of common rights and equal laws,
The glorious dream of Harrington,
And Sidney's grand old cause.

Blessing the cotter and the Crown,
Sweetening wage labour's bitter cup,
And plucking not the highest down,
Lifting the lowest up."

Wonderful Progress in Horse Breeding

The great demand for large work horses has led to extreme experiments in breeding the small mares of Western ranges to large Percheron stallions. The results contrary to public belief, have proven remarkably successful. From these mares, weighing from 700 to 900 pounds, when bred to imported Percheron stallions, are produced horses that possess about one-half of the united weight of sire and dam, and while partaking of the characteristics of the sire, they lose none of the endurance and hardihood of the dam, selling readily for from $100 to $200.

As the vast herds of the long-horned, gaunt Texas cattle, worth from 2 to 3 cents a pound, that appeared on our market a few years since, have been improved by the use of Short-horn and Hereford bulls until we scarcely recognize the blood-like looking steers, worth from 5 to 6 cents a pound, now coming from the range as their descendants; so may we expect, that the useless horses that are being brought from the West and Southwest and sold through the states at from $25 to $50 a head, will soon be displaced in our markets by their descendants of triple their value being of sufficient size to work, and showing the character and docility of their sires.

One of the best evidences of the success of this method of breeding is deduced from the fact that M. W. Dunham, of Wayne, Ill., the greatest importer of Draft horses in America, and from whose stables have gone out nearly all the pure bred Percherons stallions now in breeding upon the Western ranges, and who has had the benefit of the experience of all those who have been breeding from stallions bought of him during the past ten years, has engaged in the business with the Messrs. Studebaker, of South Bend, Ind. and John A. Witter, of Denver, Col., and invested half a million dollars in ranges and stock. The present year they are breeding about 2,000 mares to 32 of the finest imported Percheron stallions. The uniformity, beauty and size of the colts produced from the range mares and the imported sires, has attracted the attention of many of the progressive breeders of the West; notably the Hon. M. E. Post, Member of Congress, from Wyoming, who has one of the finest bands of horses, and probably one of the largest and best ranges in that territory, consisting of 100,000 acres under fence, recently purchased. During the past year Mr. Post has bought from Mr. Dunham 15 imported Percheron stallions and two imported Percheron mares; also, the Oregon Horse and Land Co., located on Snake River and owning 8,000 horses, have bought of him a large number of Percheron stallions, and are introducing them exclusively for breeding on their herd. Many other prominent stock breeders, recognizing the superiority of the Percheron cross, have been liberal purchasers of Mr. Dunham. Among them Poindexter & Orr, Conrad Kohrs, Mr. Clark, Mr. Maulden, Mr. Murphy and others of Montana; Shipman Bros of Northwest Ty., Mr. Latimer and Mr. McNutt, of Idaho, Mr. Dean, of Nevada; Mr. Gory, Mr. Clark and Mr. Roundy, of Utah; Mr. Lot Smith, Mr. Mortison of Arizona; Mr. Starkweather and numerous others of Texas; which shows what a powerful hold this system of breeding is taking on the minds of range breeders. To supply this vast trade which penetrates every portion of the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Manitoba to the Gulf, $3,000,000 worth of horses have been imported from France since 1872 by M. W. Dunham, of Oakland Farm, Wayne DuPage Co., Ill.; who now has on hand 500 head of pedigreed stallions and mares.

PETERBOROUGH, FEB. 5, 1885.

The Tory Bribery Plot.

The usual formalities and routine over, the present session of the Ontario Legislature, opened in a manner as startling and discomfiting to the Opposition, as the last session closed. The expiring session witnessed the exposure of the Tory Bribery Plot, and the opening one sees the report of the Royal Commission, appointed to investigate the charges against the Tory quartette, Wilkinson, Bunting, Meek and Kirkland. On Friday last, Hon. Mr. Hardy laid before the House, the report of the Commissioners appointed to investigate the charges. That the learned judges find all the charges proved, is no surprise to anybody who has followed the course of the inquiry into the guilt or innocence of the parties accused. The judgment is so clear, positive and unequivocal in its statements, that neither the conspirators nor their friends can have any doubt of the certainty of the Commission's opinion as to their guilt.

The purport of the charges made by Mr. Mowat at the time of the discovery of the plot was as follows:—

That certain persons, including Christopher W. Bunting, John A. Wilkinson, Edward Meek, F. S. Kirkland, and one "Lynch," or Stimson, had conspired to defeat the government by corrupting certain members of the House.

That with this object in view the conspirators had approached certain supporters of the Government with money and promises of offices in the gift of the Dominion Government.

The members so tempted, thought it their duty to the public and to the House to appear to entertain the proposals, in orde rthat proof might be secured for the detection, exposure and punishment of the conspirators.

The matter was then referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but owing to the approach of the close of the session, it was impossible to finish the investigation, and the recommendation of the Committee for the appointment of a Royal Commission to thoroughly investigate the charges was agreed to by both sides of the House. The Commission was to consist of three judges, of whom one at least, was to be a judge of the Supreme Court. The Commission was accordingly directed to Vice-Chancellor Proudfoot, of the Supreme Court, Judge Scott, of Peel County, and Judge Senkler, of Lincoln.

The report recites that due diligence and endeavour were used to apprise the parties charged [of the meetings of the Commission, and to secure their attendance.

Mr. Meek made his appearance at every meeting, Mr. Bunting was at the latter meetings, Mr. Kirkland was present by Counsel, Mr. Wilkinson domiciled himself in Manitoba, and though served with a summons to attend, failed to do so, reasoning no doubt that it was impossible for any Royal Commission to give him a deeper sense of his guilt in the than he himself it was conscious of.

Allusion is made to the demand of Mr. Meredith, as leader of the Opposition, to cross-examine witnesses on behalf of his friends, and also to the ridiculous charge against Hon. Messrs. Mowat, Fraser, Pardee and Hardy, of inducing members of the House to approach the conspirators

Wilkinson, Bunting, Meek and Kirkland being the innocents whose integrity was thus assailed. Mr Bunting during the inquiry declined to accept the offer of the judges to cross-examine the witnesses.

The Commissioners, from the 14th of July, the first, to the 18th of October, the last sitting, were occupied fourteen days, the fullest facilities being afforded for securing the fullest publicity, and openness of the proceedings.

The conclusions arrived at by the Commissioners, after a careful sifting of the evidence, and hearing the addresses of counsel, are substantially as follows:—

That, in their opinion, the credibility of Messrs. McKim and Cascaden, the principal witnesses against the accused, was not impaired by the attempts made so to do.

That in the first part of the session, Wilkinson, Meek and Bunting, acted in concert to attempt to form a Coalition Government, by trying to induce members supporting the Government, to vote against it on the Address.

That to promote the success of this attempt, the conspirators made corrupt offers of money and offices to Messrs. McKim and Cascaden, to vote against the Government.

That towards the end of the session the attack was renewed, not only on the above gentlemen, but on Messrs. Balfour, Dowling and Lyon.

That Kirkland offered to pay Mr. Balfour $1000 or $1200 to speak against the Government, stating that Bunting and Wilkinson wished to know what he would take and vote against the Government.

That Wilkinson offered Mr. Balfour anything desired in the way of a Shrievalty or Registrarship in the North-West, or Dominion Government departmental advertising for his paper.

That Wilkinson represented Bunting as working with him in the nefarious business, and signified his ability to pay $1000 or $1200 down as a guarantee of the office, and $1000 after the vote. On the 17th of March, Wilkinson did pay Mr. Balfour $800, and promised $700 after the vote, on a resolution to be submitted by the Opposition.

That at Wilkinson's request, Mr. McKim brought about a meeting between Messrs Lyon, Wilkinson and Meek.

That Meek promised to withdraw the election petition against Mr. Lyon, if he would betray the Government by his vote on their timber policy.

That Mr. Lyon wanted security, and Bunting was offered for this purpose, he agreeing to see the petition withdrawn.

That corrupt offers were made by Wilkinson to Dr. Dowling, in consideration of the latter voting against the Government, and resigning his seat. The corrupt offers were that the election petition against him should be withdrawn, his expenses recouped, and $2000 paid after the vote, and $2000 or $3000 more on his resignation, in case he did not oppose the Tory candidate.

That at Wilkinson's instance, Dr. Dowling saw Bunting, who assured him if he would vote against the Government, and help to form a Coalition, they (presumably the Tory party) could give him $2000 or $3000.

That Wilkinson next took Dr. Dowling to Stimson, who wanted to bet $2000 that he would not vote against the Government; that Wilkinson and Kirkland together tried to induce him to desert his party.

That all offers of bribes in the form of either money or offices were made known to the Government, and the Commissioners find that they (the parties approached) had no intention of accepting for themselves any of the things offered.

That in regard to the charges formulated by Mr. Meredith against members of the Government, the Commissioners hold that the evidence failed totally to establish them.

That the members approached made no advances, and they acted on advice given them.

That the advances were made to them, and they appeared to entertain them with a view of obtaining evidence.

That the money given to Messrs. McKim and Balfour appears to have come from or through Wilkinson and Stimson.

That there seems to be no reason for thinking that any of the Conservative members of the House tried to use improper means to influence members to change their party allegiance.

Such is the result of the enquiry into the particulars of one of the most shameless, impudent and disgraceful bribery plots ever concocted in any civilized country. The decision of the Commissioners coincides with the judgment every unprejudiced person was forced to form from the evidence presented during the various stages of the events occurring since the disclosure of the bribery iniquity. The decision of the judges composing the the Commission has naturally enough enraged the Tory journals, for whose equanimity the failure of the plot and the conviction and consequent punishment of the plotters is too much. The Mail characteristically, shrieks out that the finding is that of a "partisan" clique of judges, but its rant will be taken by the public at its true value. Its grounds of disconfiture are two fold—first the utter failure of the bribery plot to place its party in power, and secondly, the disclosure of the plot and the conviction of the parties concerned in it.

"A Poor Excuse."

The Review heads an article as above, and screeches loudly that an attempt is being made by the Ontario Government to place the onus and responsibility "of the school book muddle" on poor Mr. Crooks, and goes on to say that it is "both untrue and cowardly" on the part of the Liberals to do so.

If the above were correct it might be termed cowardly, but any school boy might have informed our "learned" friend that the government were fully responsible for the policy of the Hon. Mr. Crooks. Such a plea would avail nothing if it were true. We might inform our contemporary that the Government are quite prepared to take all the responsibility on this question, and that they have no more intention of taking advantage of Mr. Crooks' mental infirmity than they have of taking the member for West Peterborough into the Cabinet as Minister of Education. The "cowardliness" is only the imaginings of our suspicious cotem. The following paragraph from the Globe, which is the position of the Government on this question, should be sufficient to lead the Review, if it is honest, to withdraw its "cowardly" attack:—

"Mr. Mowat somewhat dampened the school-book fervour of Messrs. Creighton, Carnegie, and a few other front-benched Opposition[ists] when he declared that at the proper time the Minister of Education would show that the agreement for the publication of these books was the best arrangement ever made in the interests of the people of Ontario. He did not ask either that any ameliorating circumstances surrounding the matter should be considered. They were perfectly willing that the transaction should stand upon its merits."

What excuse can the Review give now for its factious and unfounded criticism?

The Bribery Plot.

Before the Royal Commission appointed to investigate into certain charge of bribery and conspiracy, Mr. Meredith preferred the following charge:

"That members of the Government, Messrs. Fraser, Pardee, Hardy and Mowat, knowing that attempts were being made to corrupt members of the House, induced members of the House to approach the persons who are said to have been engaged in the work for the purpose of inducing them to make corrupt offers, and to endeavour to entrap others not engaged in the matters into the same criminal acts."

After hearing the sworn evidence the Commissioners report:

"In regard to the charge made by Mr. Meredith against Messrs. Fraser, Pardee, Hardy and Mowat, the Commissioners are of opinion that the evidence wholly fails to establish it. All the witnesses who speak on the subject, with one exception, show that the advice of these members of the Government to the persons to whom offers were made, was to be passive, to see how far the persons making the offers would go. That is the evidence of these members of the Government themselves; it is the evidence also of the persons to whom they gave the advice. The only conflicting evidence is that of the witness Vickars, who says he heard Hardy say to Fraser, 'If our little scheme with Balfour works we will fix them.' This was distinctly denied both by Hardy and Fraser. The commissioners think that Vickars was either under a mistake as to the persons who were speaking together or that he was telling an untruth. They were not favourably impressed with the manner in which Vickars gave his evidence, and do not credit his testimony."

The judges report speaks for itself and shows the way that some of the Conservatives would try to get rid of the Reform party by buying up the House.

A Promising Institution.

On Tuesday last the first annual meeting of the shareholders of the Central Canada Loan and Savings Company was held in Peterborough. A good number of shareholders and the officers of the Company were present. The first annual report of the Directors, submitted by the President, Geo. A. Cox, Esq., presented a very promising and satisfactory showing. Although the Company has been organized only some months, the transactions have already resulted in investments of over half a million of dollars, and the Company was able to pay all preliminary and other expenses, and to declare a dividend of six per cent. per annum to the shareholders, leaving a balance to the credit of profit and loss of $2,968.74. When it is considered that this handsome result has been arrived at in the face of preliminary expenditures, incident to the formation of such a Company, the expense of management, the necessarily limited time the investments have had in which to develop a profit, and whatever other drawbacks attend the inception of a new financial undertaking, the result is unexpectedly gratifying. It augurs a future full of hope for the permanency of the Company and the safety of its operations. With the prudence of management that will no doubt characterize the Directors, the Central Canada Loan and Savings Company as an investing medium must stand high in the opinion of the public, who have already shown a flattering degree of confidence in the stability of the Company, which will be largely increased by the selection of the following new Board of Directors:—President, Geo. A. Cox, Esq.; Vice-President, J. R. Dundas, Esq., M.P., South Victoria; Directors,—J. M. Ferris, Esq., M.P.P., East Northumberland; William Cluxton, Esq., Richard Hall, Esq., James Stevenson, Esq., and D. W. Dumble, Esq., Peterborough; Wm. Gooderham, Esq., and Robert Jaffray, Esq., Toronto; F. C. Taylor, Esq., Lindsay, and E. S. Vinden, Esq., Port Hope. These gentlemen represent a personal financial responsibility of two million dollars. At the first meeting of the shareholders it was proposed to limit the issue of the stock to $300,000. So promptly, however, was this amount absorbed by subscription, that, to meet further applications, the Directors recommended an increased issue of stock to the amount of $100,000, which at the annual meeting was agreed to. We refer those of our readers interested in financial transactions to the report of the first annual meeting, to be found in another column. The presence of another company in our midst, founded upon correct business principles and controlled by reliable business men, is not only a source of pride to the town but an agreeable fact to investors, who cannot but prefer a home company, especially when it offers the solid security and handsome returns afforded to investments in the Central Canada Loan and Savings Company.

A Generous Gift.

We are sure the public will receive with pleasure the announcement made in our news columns of the munificent gift of "Moira Hall" for a hospital, endowed with $10,000, made to the town and county of Peterborough by Mrs. Robert Nicholls. Apart from the magnitude of the amount given, the situation of the premises is a matter of congratulation. "Moira Hall," while within easy distance of the town—on its very western border—affords the seclusion and salubrity of site which fit it specially for the purposes of a hospital. The gift is all the more acceptable from the fact that it meets a want greatly felt. Lack of hospital accommodations has sometimes reflected adversely upon the humanity of the town, from the impossibility of giving the destitute and friendless that treatment and care which would be found in a hospital. Mrs. Nicholls' generosity has removed the possibility of reproach in this respect from us. Her example is one that might well be followed by those who have a superfluity of wealth beyond the claims of personal and family requirements. We hope that the town and county, which have through their respective committees accepted the trust, will not be long in completing the formalities and arrangements necessary for the opening of the Nicholls Hospital for the reception of patients. It might be suggested, when this is done, that the proper authorities, in memory of the giver, affix to the main door or other suitable place, a bronze or other plate, with an inscription something like this:—

This Hospital and Grounds were presented as a free gift to the Town and County of Peterborough, by Mrs. Charlotte J. Nicholls, on January 20th, 1885. Geo. A. Cox, Mayor; R. C. Strickland, Warden.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

Fifth Parliament—Third Session.

OTTAWA, January 29.

The third session of the fifth Parliament of Canada was opened to-day with the usual formalities, in the presence of a large number of ladies and gentlemen of distinction. The following is the full text of the

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate,
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In again meeting you for the despatch of business I have to congratulate you on the abundant harvest with which Providence has blessed our country and upon the general condition of the Dominion. In commercial prosperity, although it has to some extent shared in the depression which has prevailed in Great Britain and in the neighboring Republic, rests upon foundations which no temporary or partial disturbance can remove.

I trust that the present year will be one of peace and progress.

The flow of population into Manitoba and the North-West Territories, although impeded by various and unexpected causes, has been substantial, and the testimony of members of the British Association and other visitors to the North-West last summer as to the well-being, contentment, and hopefulness of the settlers is most gratifying.

A Bill introducing into those Territories a more simple and economical system for the transfer of land will be laid before you.

The Report of the Commission for the consolidation of the Statutes affecting the Dominion has been completed, and will be submitted to you for legislative action.

You are again invited to consider a measure relating to the representation of the people in Parliament, and for the assimilation of the Electoral Franchise in the several Provinces.

A provisional arrangement of matters for some time under discussion with the Government of Manitoba has been entered into, and a measure confirming the same will be submitted to you as soon as it has been accepted by the Provincial Legislature.

I deemed it expedient to issue during the recess a Commission to consider and report upon the whole subject of Chinese Immigration with reference to its trade relations, as well as to those social and moral objections which have been taken to the influx of the Chinese people into Canada. The Report of the Commissioners is very nearly completed, and will be laid before you during the present Session.

The necessity of encouraging the speedy construction of lines of Railway through the North-West Territories has pressed itself on my Government, and you will be asked to aid Railway enterprise by liberal grants of land.

Urgent representations have been made by the Boards of Trade of the chief towns in Canada, as well as by some of the Chambers of Commerce in Great Britain, of the necessity that exists for the adoption of some system of bankruptcy or Insolvency giving adequate protection against undue preferences, and your attention to this important subject is earnestly invited.

In pursuance of the vote of last session I caused a vessel to be fitted out and despatched to Davis' Straits and Hudson's Bay in order to obtain more accurate information as to the navigation of those waters, and test the practicability of the route for commercial purposes.

A report of the progress of the expedition during the last session will be laid before you.

An International Exhibition will be opened at Antwerp during the present year, and a Colonial and Indian Exhibition is to be held in London in 1886. Canada should I think, be represented in her various manufactures and natural productions on both occasions, and I envoke your consideration of the best means of aiding in these important objects.

Several other measures of importance will be submitted to you; among them will be Bills to amend the Insurance Act of 1877, the Civil Service Act, and the law relating to contagious diseases among cattle, as well as measures for taking at an early period a census of the population of the North-West Territories, and one relating to the North-West Mounted Police.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons;

The accounts for the past fiscal year will be laid before you. You will find that notwithstanding the very considerable reduction in the prices and volume of many of the leading imports, the income has exceeded the expenditure chargeable to Consolidated Revenues.

The Estimates for the ensuing year will also be submitted. They will be found, I trust, to have been prepared with due regard to economy.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate,
Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I am sure that your earnest consideration will be given to the subjects I have mentioned, as well as to every matter which may effect the prosperity and good government of Canada.

THE BOARD OF HEALTH.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

At the last meeting of our Town Council, a communication was read from P.H. Bryce, Prov. Secretary of the Board of Health, asking the Council, or rather ordering that a Medical health officer be at once appointed in this town. We thank that gentleman for his unsolicited patronage, and we beg to inform him that the people of Peterborough do not want a medical Health officer. Our citizens would also beg to inform Mr. P.H. Bryce that it gives them great pleasure to relieve him from all future anxiety with regard to the affairs of this municipality; and we also wish him much success in the discharge of these duties at home which, technically, may be regarded as his own business.

The people of Peterboro know precisely what they want and they have an intelligent Council who are willing to carry out the wishes of the citizens. Nobody in this town wants such a useless and expensive gew-gaw as a Medical Health officer, and hence our Council wisely decline to make such appointment.

Plenty of "the beautiful."

Diarrhœa in the west of the Township, at Mr. Wesley Robertson's. "Cause—frozen roots decomposing in cellar. Mild type—all doing well.

Dr. McCrea's eldest son is making a visit at home, previous to finishing his business studies in Toronto.

The Keene Curling Club have again organized and are now in full practice on the river. We see them "muster every day." It is a grand game and requires a good deal of muscle, as well as skill.

"Rah for Keene!" We had a carnival Carnival last Wednesday night, at the Victoria Rink. The ice was in fine condition, and no end of praise is due to everybody for the general success of the whole affair, it being the best ever held here. All seemed bent on getting a good time, and got it. The ladies' costumes were pretty, and well selected. The gentlemen's unique and sometimes startling. The Pentypool Minstrels have a wonderful versatility of talent. Christy's Minstrels are nowhere. The P.M. can render a "musical discord" (an interlude) in a style excelled by none—equalled by few. We hope to see them at our next Carnival, the latter part of this month. Mr. Hartley, the champion skater, also amazed us with his wonderful feats in that line. He is to be congratulated on his prowess as a skater, if decorations are any index of success, for his breast was literally covered with medals, etc. Below we give a list of parties in costume so far as we are able to procure them—the general crowd was so large we could hardly get through. There was probably fifty or more in masquerade; and many skaters besides in plain dress. We shall have another Carnival before long, and then we shall see wonderful things, so the prophet saith.

FRASERVILLE.

From our own Correspondent.

A lecture on "King William and his Times," was delivered in Fraserville church by Rev. Mr. Burns, of Cannington. As Mr. Burns is a member of that brotherhood called Orangemen, having filled the exalted position of being Grand Chaplain of Eastern Ontario for upwards of ten years, we have every reason to say he was at home on such a subject, and both old and young left the church highly delighted; and nearly every one present was heard to say, that was the grandest lecture I ever heard. We intended giving a synopsis of the lecture, had it not been for the fact that ere long we hope to have the pleasure of listening to his esteemed personage on a similar subject. In connection with the lecture there was a grand social, provided by the esteemed ladies of the church. We trust the many readers of THE EXAMINER will remember the grand intellectual feast in store for them not later than the last week of February. For further particulars see handbills, soon to be out. Don't miss it for it will be the affair of the season. Food will be provided for both body and mind. Singers from the city are invited.

A short time ago a lecture was delivered in Springville church by Rev. Mr. Cleland, of Port Hope. The Springville correspondent said the rev. gentleman attempted to prove that the English people were descended from the "lost tribes of Israel." He certainly must have interpreted the lecturer's language wrongly, because on starting out the speaker stated he intended proving that the English speaking people were not descended from the lost tribes, as Dr. Wild, of Toronto, maintained they were. Therefore Mr. Cleland's lecture was directly opposed to Dr. Wild's. The general impression was, Dr. Wild had been there he would have made it very warm—too warm, we fear, for the lecturer. If there is an Englishman in the vicinity who is in sympathy with Mr. Cleland's arguments on that occasion, we would ask him to make it a point, merely for satisfaction, to hear the Dr. and I fancy I see him after he has listened for about sixty minutes, and soon I hear him say, "Lost! lost! something I never believed until, now."

It may be called encroaching on our part to relate anything that has transpired recently in the locality of Springville, as it appears they have a correspondent there; but whoever that correspondent is we sincerely hope he or she will pardon us if we make mention of one or two events. We believe that the leading conversation in Springville is, that is more especially among the sporting class, he (whoever that he is) has the fastest trotting horse in that part, ida included. Around the same village it is whispered occasionally, that a colt which has been recently purchased by one of the sporting class will make a stepper, probably a faster one than the one referred to by the Springville, cor. last week. The colt is certainly in good hands, and we believe would not have been purchased had he (the buyer) not seen the fleet-limbed and beautiful displayed in some part of its carcase.

A grand social and concert was given in Springville church on Thursday, Jan. 29th. We have every reason to congratulate the members of the Ladies' Aid Society here, because of the magnificent refreshments which were provided by the ladies on that occasion, and also on account of the discreetness exhibited by them in selecting such talent for the joyous occasion. Old and young enjoyed themselves. Fourteen members of St. Paul's church choir were there, and under the leadership of Mr. Gallelly did their part well. The singing by our home talent was also highly appreciated. The literary part was of a more lively character than was expected, and on the whole it may be termed a good, lively, interesting concert. Rev. W. Bennett presided over the meeting. Receipts of evening, $41.50.

Debate in Young People's General Improving Society for next night is, "Resolved that Napoleon was a greater General than Wellington." J. R. Laing leader on side for Napoleon, and A. H. Strike for Wellington. Meeting to be held on Feb. 9th, in Springville.

(Continuation of Report.)

SCHOOL REPORT.

Mr. James Coyle Brown, Inspector of Public Schools, read his semi-annual report as below;

On motion Mr. Jas. Coyle Brown, County Inspector of Schools, read the report for the last half of 1884 as follows:

To the Warden and Council of the County of Peterborough.

GENTLEMEN,—In presenting my report for the latter half of 1884, according to your instructions contained in the resolution passed in June last, I must express my regret that it is not complete, and in some instances not as full as I could wish. Sickness and death in my family prevented me from being on the road for some weeks, therefore, this time, I must claim your kind indulgence. In my report for the current half year the information will, I hope, be much fuller and more satisfactory.

The progress of many of the schools is very materially retarded by irregularity of attendance. How to remedy this a most difficult question, and upon the discussion of it I shall not now attempt to enter. Another drawback is want of adequate blackboard accommodation. There should be enough blackboard space in each school room, in addition to what the teacher wants, to afford at least a square yard for each pupil of the largest class in the room. The work of the pupils in most of the branches taught should be tested on the board, then the errors can be seen by all, and the corrections can be readily and impressively made. I have called the attention of trustees in many cases to the defectiveness of their school rooms in this particular, and hope soon to be able to report that all the schools have plenty of blackboard accommodation.

For a number of years this county was placed at great disadvantage as compared with others, on account of having no Model School. When we got teachers from outside they were in many cases the refuse of other places, and when young men and young women of ability went from the county to obtain their Model School training they were often picked up by others and lost to us. The latter, I am happy to say, is not likely to continue. A Model School has been established at Norwood. During the last Model School term there were ten teachers in training at it. The majority of these are now teaching in the county, and I believe that most, if not all of them, will do well.

Many of you doubtless recollect that the Board of Agriculture and Arts established an examination for lads engaged in farm work. A course of reading was laid down and a list of suitable books given. The first examination was held at the same time as the Intermediate of last summer. From this county only one candidate presented himself. He, however, succeeded in passing, and obtained fourth prize for the Province. I have sent to the various teachers the circulars issued by the Board above referred to, relating to this examination for the present year and hope that many farmers' sons and others engaged in tilling the soil in this county may be induced to try the examination. To many engaged in reading up for it, it will give a taste for useful, practical knowledge embodied in books, the value of which can scarcely be estimated.

You will, I suppose, be waited upon as usual, and asked to make a grant to the Collegiate Institute of Peterborough and the High School at Norwood. Whether waited upon or not, you would, I think, be doing what is best for the county's interest by making a liberal grant to each of these institutions. One thousand dollars thus given would be a tax of less than 10 cents on the average ratepayer, and the good done to many directly, and to all indirectly, would be very great.

I have the honor to be, gentlemen,
Your obedient servant,
J. COYLE BROWN,
County Inspector.

The report was referred to the Committee on Schools.

THIRD DAY—THURSDAY.

The members of the council spent the greater part of the day in work in committee. About four o'clock the council went into session, all the members present, and the warden in the chair, to receive two or three deputations.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE GRANT.

Messrs. James Stevenson and J. R. Stratton were heard as a deputation from the Peterborough Board of Education to solicit from the county council a grant to the Collegiate Institute.

Both gentlemen addressed the council urging the expediency of the grant, and pointing out how the Board, notwithstanding the repeated refusal of the council to aid the Institute, had spared no expense to maintain the high order and efficiency of the teaching staff, and the necessary appliances of such an educational institution. Now that the study of agricultural chemistry was added to the list of subjects the council should not ignore the claims of the Institute. The matter was referred to the Finance committee.

THE NICHOLLS HOSPITAL.

Mr. Poussette, solicitor, presented the communication of Mrs. Charlote J. Nicholls, offering "Moira Hall," endowed with $10,000, to the town and county of Peterborough, to be maintained by them as a general hospital. Referred to a special committee composed of Messrs. Burnham, Brown, Kid, Lang and Sanderson, to confer with a committee of the town council.

COURT HOUSE PARK.

Messrs. J. H. Roper and James Stevenson also appeared as a deputation from the Peterborough Horticultural Society, to ask co-operation in beautifying Court House Park:

Mr. Roper said the society had considered the desirability of beautifying Court House Park, and had appointed the deputation to urge upon the county the advisability of making a grant in aid of this object. He submitted that if the county council gave a grant of $200, the town being willing to give a similar amount, and the society prepared to meet both liberally, the placing of ornamental trees in the park and the introduction of walks and drives could be accomplished. The park would be free to the public, and, as there was no object of making money in connection with the matter, he thought there could be no objection to making the grant.

Mr. Stevenson endorsed fully the arguments that Mr. Roper had advanced, and added that he was sure a favorable arrangement could be made with the water works company for the introduction of water supply for fountains, and the place thereby made a delightful resort for the inhabitants of Peterborough. Referred to the Finance committee.

SOUTH MONAGHAN.

Deputations from the Town Council and South Monaghan were also received in reference to the matter of a bridge at Ross's Point, and for further facilitating trade intercourse between that town and the county.

Mr. Cox, Mayor, stated that a deputation from South Monaghan had waited on the town council, and the proposition with reference to facilitating communication had been most cordially entertained. He urged the council to make a grant in aid of the object sought, and thus foster the closer commercial intercourse between a large and wealthy township and the county of Peterborough.

Mr. Riddell more minutely explained the object of the agitation, and emphasized the importance of more intimate trade relations. He thought if the county made a suitable grant it would produce more harmonious feeling which might ultimately lead closer municipal relations.

FOURTH DAY—FRIDAY.

The members of the council having spent most of the day in committee, met in council at 4 o'clock, the warden in the chair and all the members present.

After routine,

Mr. Stewart, chairman, presented the report of the committee on

PETITIONS:

The Committee on Petitions beg leave to report as follows:

2. That with reference to the memorial of the Municipal Council of the County of Lincoln, asking this Council to memorialize the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to enact that all property belonging to church corporations from which a revenue is derived, be not exempted from taxation, your Committee is in general with such legislation, but are of opinion that all church property, where religious worship is conducted, should be exempted from taxation.

3. That with reference to the communication from the Municipal Council of the County of Welland, asking the co-operation of this Council in urging upon the Dominion Government the passing of an Act providing for the assimilation of passenger rates and freight charges made by different railways throughout the Dominion of Canada, your Committee recommend that the petition hereto annexed be duly accepted and forwarded to the proper authorities.

4. Your Committee recommend that no action be taken in relation to the petition from the County of Wellington with regard to memorialising the Provincial Legislature to grant aid to County Institutions such as Poor Houses, Industrial Farms, or Hospitals, etc.

5. That with reference to the communication from the Municipal Council of the County of Waterloo, in reference to a uniform width of tires on wagons and other wheeled vehicles, to be used on public roads or highways, your Committee recommend that a memorial be drawn to the Provincial Legislature urging that in the opinion of this Council, an Act passed for this purpose should provide that within a reasonable period after the enactment, the width of tires on wagons, drays, and all other wheeled vehicles, used on any of the public roads or highways within the Province, carrying a load of fifteen hundred pounds and upwards, shall not be less than three inches, and that a reasonable punishment be meted out to any person or persons violating the provisions of such Act.

6. That with reference to the communication from the Municipal Council of the County of Victoria, asking the co-operation of this Council in petitioning the Dominion Government to relieve those municipalities in the Province which have granted aid to railways, from the burden of taxation under which they are thereby suffering, your Committee recommend that a memorial be duly forwarded to the proper authority praying that the County of Victoria and other such Counties, be recouped in accordance with such memorial.

7. That in accordance with the request of the Municipal Council of the County of York, advocating the appointment of county registrars and surrogate registrars by County Councils, your Committee recommend that a copy of the resolution hereto annexed be forwarded to the Local Legislature with an addition thereto recommending that all appointees whose salaries the County Council, or any municipality, pay, should be placed in the nomination of the respective councils.

8. That the petition from the County of Oxford with reference to aid given to railways be read before the Council for their consideration. (Mr. Stewart here read the petition referred to.)

9. That with reference to the petition from the Municipal Council of the County of Carleton in relation to asking the Local Legislature for increased accommodation for the insane, your Committee recommend that a memorial be prepared in accordance therewith, and be forwarded to the proper authority.

10. That no action be taken with regard to the communication from the County of Kent in reference to the proposed amendment of the Act for imposing a tax on dogs.

11. That in reference to the communication from Beverly Jones in favor of a law to simplify titles to real estate, your Committee recommend that a memorial in the form hereto annexed, be forwarded to the Local Legislature.

All of which is respectfully submitted.
GEORGE STEWART,
Chairman.

Peterborough, Jan. 30th, 1885.

[The memorials and petitions referred to merely embody the essentials alluded to in the above report, and it does not seem necessary to reproduce them.

The following is the resolution respecting registrars referred to in the above report:

Mr. Stewart moved, seconded by Mr. Sanderson, that, in the opinion of this Council, it would prove conducive to the best interests of the people, and be more in accord with the spirit and genius of municipal institutions in this Province to make county and surrogate registrars county officers, to confer upon the County Councils power to appoint the same, as they now do county treasurers. Also power to regulate the fees and emoluments chargeable for registration, filing of documents, searches, etc., by by-law up to a maximum rate, not exceeding the fees now payable, said fees to form part of the general funds of the county, due regard being had to acquired or vested rights of present incumbents, and that all appointees whose salaries the County Council of any municipality pay, should be placed in the nomination of the respective councils.

The report was on motion adopted.

The Warden named Messrs. Moloney, Burnham, J. P. Brown, Sanderson and Lang a committee to draft a memorial to the Dominion Government urging greater speed in the construction of the Trent Valley Canal.

JANUARY WEATHER NOTES.

January has been of varied temperature with snow, rain, cold and fine. During the month we had three cold dips, namely on the first days on the 20th the thermometer again falling and on the morning of the 22nd it stood 24° below zero, and again on the 27th it stood at 17° below. Although the cold was felt severe in the eastern provinces it did not range so low here, as on the 22nd or as the cold dip in December. Rain fell on 5 days but only to the depth of 79-100 of an inch. Snow fell on 12 days to the depth of 11 inches and 3-10 of an inch, so both in rain and snow our downfall has been below the average, while the mean temperature of the month was only 14 11-31. During the month at sunrise the wind was blowing from the following points the respective number of days, being north 3, north-west 11, south 5, south-west 3, east 5, west 3, south-east 1. Our dips being from the north or north-west and only once from the east, and once from the south-west did the thermometer drop below zero.

On Monday morning the 2nd inst at sunrise the thermometer stood at 27° degrees below zero being the same as the 26th of December, our coldest day of the season.

THE EGYPTIAN EMBROGLIO.

STEWART'S VICTORY.

The point where the battle of the 19th occurred is in the desert, about five miles south from Metemmeh. When Stewart reached that point he found that the enemy were hovering about his little army on all sides, and skirting it often within uncomfortably short range. The rebels had stationed themselves in the vicinity to await his arrival, and give him battle. When they began to surround and press in upon him, he ordered his men to dismount and form a zareba. This was made mainly with saddles and baggage. During its construction the rebel riflemen maintained a hot fire on the British, killing twelve and wounding forty. Among the first killed were Cameron, special correspondent of the London Standard, and Herbert, special correspondent of the London Post. General Stewart was shot in the thigh. When he was struck the work of making the zareba was about completed, and the army had been put in motion to form a hollow square. The square advanced two miles under a steady ambush fire. At this point the enemy began to move upon the square in two large echelons directed against the British right front, which stood unmoved. During the rebel charge the British delivered a terrific fire aimed right at the enemy's middle, mowing down men in such heaps that they formed an actual obstacle which interfered seriously with the success of the onslaught. The centre line of the enemy was brought to a standstill 60 yards from the British front line. The force of the general movement threw unimpeded parts of the line around the corners of the square, and the rebels so displaced were simply cut to pieces. From this on, the warfare was as disastrous to the rebels as it was irregular on their side.

When the enemy's line was broken, the Arabs seemed to break up into bands, each of which waged war on its own account. A large detachment, mostly on horseback, went back to attack the zareba. This was garrisoned by a body of English soldiers, made up of little detachments left behind by each corps. Lord Beresford was in command. He sustained the attack for two hours, when the enemy was compelled to retreat.

During the general attack upon the square only six men were killed and twenty-three wounded on the English side. During this fight the artillery did awful execution. During the advance of the main body from the zareba the garrison left behind kept up a heavy fire. Efforts were made to erect a small redoubt fifty yards to the right of the zareba. While this redoubt was being erected, one man was killed and three were wounded. Lord Cochrane, with forty men from the Life Guards and Scots Greys, held the redoubt and maintained a heavy fire throughout the battle doing much to repel the constant rushes of the enemy. The losses of the rebels during the whole day are estimated at two thousand killed and wounded. Among the enemy were many slaves, several of whom have submitted to the British.

The square reached the Nile at sunset, Monday evening and encamped early Tuesday morning. Scouting parties made a reconnoisance, and destroyed some empty villages.

Prisoners state the enemy came from Khartoum, and that the force which attacked the British at Abu Klea was the advance guard.

On January 22nd the British encamped at Abu Ked, two miles south of Metemma. The enemy were sparing in use of ammunition in defending Metemma, and only kept up a desultory fire. The rebel forces throughout all the engagements have been well handled. It is stated that two Europeans are among them. A female prisoner states that the British fire decimated the enemy, who seem determined to remain inside Metemma.

Five of General Gordon's steamers conveying 500 soldiers and five guns arrived at Gubat from Khartoum on the 22nd. The troops and guns were landed, the guns were turned upon Metemma without producing any apparent effect upon the rebels.

It is reported that the Mahdi is sending more troops and guns to Metemma.

On the 22nd, General Wilson, with five of Gordon's steamers, and a number of black troops, two companies of mounted infantry and six guns bombarded Shendy for two hours. They almost completely destroyed the town, but the occupants appeared to be unwilling to surrender. The steamers afterwards returned to Gubat, where a number of forts are being erected. It is stated that the Mahdi has a force of 6,000 men around Khartoum. The population of Khartoum is now estimated at 14,000.

The total British loss, including loss at Abu Klea, was 104 killed and 216 wounded. The enemy's loss in 3,000 killed and wounded.

Wolseley telegraphs that Stewart is doing well. No attempt has been made to extract the bullet, which entered the thigh and is lodged in the region of the groin. The wounded are doing well. The injuries of two-thirds of them are very bad, and a great number of surgical operations are necessary.

Supplies in the vicinity of Gubat are plentiful.

Some of the French papers assert that Col. Stewart's march across the desert is the most daring and heroic adventure of modern times.

KORTI, Jan. 30.—Metemma is garrisoned by 13,000 of Mahdi's troops, under command of Ollivier Pain. General Earle's expedition to Berber to the river route is making satisfactory progress. The advanced scouts exchanged shots with the enemy near Berti.

Gen. Stewart is awaiting reinforcements in order to attack Metemma, and if possible take the town by storm. There is a probability that Gen. Earle's forces will meet the enemy in battle at Abu Hamed.

BENSFORT.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Considerable time has now elapsed since your correspondent favored you with his little report of occurrences and signs of the times, and he finds that during his absence the usual Xmas greetings and pleasant amusements were enjoyable attractions in their season.

Cupid has also been entertained, and his presence and untiring energy are supposed to have settled several questions by way of happy union for Hymen, notwithstanding the unfavorable roads and inclemency of the weather.

The winter bridge on the river and lake is extra hard, but on the latter is not considered safe for travelling, except in selected places, owing to many openings caused by continual moving of the ice.

A class in music is to be organized at the hill, in the old church building. The first meeting would have been held on Thursday evening, 29th inst., but for the severity of the weather, and resulted only in the breaking of the teacher's cutter, by some of the little boys.

The topics of general interest are the new bridge, securing, not the northwest passage, but the northwest part of Hamilton as part of our township, and annexation with Peterborough county. The promotion of each one of these schemes will have many supporters, while there will, naturally, be a few uninterested dissenters, whose opinion, especially regarding the first should be considered second to the inconvenience caused by the distance we must travel to communicate with the town, which would be handsomely overcome at once for the majority by bridging the river. Keep it going. Don't have a place of such importance so far away, and yet so near.

Mr. and Mrs. W. B Kelly, of this village, were in Montreal last week, attending the carnival. They returned home on Monday of this week.

The first meeting of the Smith Township Council, for 1885, was held in the town hall here, on Monday, 2nd inst. The session was very lengthy.

A tea meeting was held in the Line Baptist Church, on Thursday evening, 29th ult. A large number sat down to tea, which was highly creditable to the ladies who provided it. After tea was served, the programme, consisting of music, addresses, etc., was entered upon. The choir sang several anthems in very good style. Mr. Bone and Mrs. St. Dalmas gave two duets, which were well rendered. Rev. Mr. St. Dalmas and Mr. Bone each gave an address, and the latter gentleman also gave a reading. The meeting was closed by the singing of the National Anthem. Altogether the meeting was a very enjoyable one.

KING'S EVIL

Was the name formerly given to Scrofula because of a superstition that it could be cured by a king's touch. The world is wiser now, and knows that can only be cured by a thorough purification of the blood. If this is neglected, the disease perpetuates its taint through generation after generation. Among its earlier symptomatic developments are Eczema, Cutaneous Eruptions, Tumors, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas, Purulent Ulcers, Nervous and Physical Collapse, etc. If allowed to continue, Rheumatism, Scrofulous Catarrh, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Tubercular Consumption, and various other dangerous or fatal maladies, are produced by it.

SCROFULA

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Is the only powerful and always reliable blood-purifying medicine. It is so effectual an alterative that it eradicates from the system Hereditary Scrofula, and the kindred poisons of contagious diseases and mercury. At the same time it enriches and vitalizes the blood, restoring healthful action to the vital organs and rejuvenating the entire system. This great

Regenerative Medicine

Is composed of the genuine Honduras Sarsaparilla, with Yellow Dock, Stillingia, the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and other ingredients of great potency, carefully and scientifically compounded. Its formula is generally known to the medical profession, and the best physicians constantly prescribe AYER'S SARSAPARILLA as an Absolute Cure

For all diseases caused by the vitiation of the blood. It is concentrated to the highest practicable degree, far beyond any other preparation for which like effects are claimed, and is therefore the cheapest, as well as the best blood purifying medicine, in the world.

THE RED FLAG.

BY

M. E. BRADDON.

Author of "Lady Audley's Secret," etc. etc. etc.

She cut down her wood, her beautiful Bois de Boulogne, the happy holiday ground of high and low. Those leafy arcades were given over to the woodman's axe, those trees were mutilated or hewn down. The swans upon the silvery lake, the fauns of those shadowy groves, were abandoned to the guns of the Mobiots. Everywhere the creak and crash of falling timber, the scream of dying beast or bird. There, where the gay procession of carriages used to circulate in the afternoon sunlight, were now loneliness and ruin; here and there a few scattered plumes, white on the greensward, showed where death had been; here and there the thick black smoke, and fitful flame, marked a newly fired thicket.

Paris was a camp, and every citizen a soldier. But the soldier's duty was neither onerous nor varied at this period. There was the morning rendezvous from seven to eight, the day and night watch on the ramparts, short slumbers under canvas, for the casements which were to shelter these heroes later on were not yet built.

Among these soldiers of the National Guard Philip Durand and Gaston Mortemar were both numbered. The charmed life of the newly wedded was over. The domestic hearth was lonely. The husband could only return to his home in the intervals of his service as a defender of his city. And the wife was full of fear in her lonely home, or prowling in the neighboring streets on some small household errand, loitering with other wives on doorsteps or at street corners, devouring the last news from the ramparts.

Trade was at a standstill. Each National Guard had his allowance of a franc and a half a day, with a small sum for wife or family; but it was almost impossible for him to carry on any handicraft during this reign of chassepot and Remington. Some there were—the few, the elect among workers—who contrived to accomplish something in their brief respite from soldiering; and among these was Durand. His employer had shut up his factory. What good was there in creating articles of luxury—artistic cabinets a la Renaissance, writing-tables a la Dubarry, commodes a la Maintenon, what use in imitating the finest works of Buhl and Reisnier, when the city was girt with iron, and might ere long be girt with fire? when at any evil hour, as yet unmarked upon the calendar, a bomb might explode in the middle of the factory, and send Buhl and Reisnier, delicate inlaid-work, ormolu and cherry-wood, pear-tree and ebony, in a shower of splinters through the shattered roof? The proprietor stowed away his choicest woods in his cellars, and locked up his warehouses and workshops. No goods could be exported from a blockaded city; and in the city there were no purchasers of art furniture.

But this did not constrain Durand to lay aside his gouges and chisels. Before his marriage he had brought home to his little workshop some fine pieces of old wood, collected in various nooks and corners of Paris—an oak panel from the wreckage of a church, an old walnut sideboard, thick, heavy, clumsy, but O, so well seasoned and richly colored. A sixteenth century house in the Marais—and with treasures such as these to his hand Philip Durand had no lack of work. He had undertaken a magnum opus in the shape of a sideboard, which in design and workmanship was to surpass anything that had yet been done in the factory where he was chief workman. All his knowledge of the master-pieces in carved oak, all his taste and skill were brought to bear upon this piece of furniture. His long Sunday afternoons in the Louvre, his study of the art-books in the Imperial Library, all helped him in his handicraft. Jacques Mollin, his friend the painter, was at his elbow to make suggestions while the drawings for the sideboard were in progress. The mighty dead had their part in the work. This tangle of fruit and flowers on the cornice owed something to Van Huysum. This heap of wild fowl and hares, flung as it were hap-hazard against a lower panel, was a souvenir of Snyders. Everywhere the mind of the artist informed the hand of the craftsman. And the sideboard was as the apple of Philip Durand's eye. It was sure to bring him money, which he cared for only for the sake of his wife and his home; it might bring him fame, which he valued for his own sake, and still more for Rose, who would be proud by and by to say, "I did not marry a common workman."

She was a gentleman's daughter, the daughter of an officer in the English army, a man of good birth and refined surroundings. This man of the people never ignored that fact when he thought of his wife. He wanted to atone to her for the sacrifice she had made; he never thought of her as the grisette, earning her living by the labor of her hands; but as Captain O'Hara's daughter, born and bred as a lady, stooping from her high estate to become a mechanic's wife.

How happy were those brief glimpses of home, those brief hours with gouge and chisel, beside the hearth, while Rose stood by and watched the slow careful work—the chiselling of a feather, the rounding of a peach, the minute touches that marked the scales of a fish!

Yes, even while fear and uncertainty ruled without, while earnings were nil, and the strictest economy was needed least these days of scarcity should exhaust the little capital amassed with such miracles of prudence and self-denial; even now, with the enemy within sight of the walls, with the future of France wrapped in gloom, there was gladness in this humble home on the second floor in the Rue Git le Cœur, and the little dinner or supper of bread and salad, the morsel of Lyons sausage, or the wine-soup was as a feast at this board, where Love ever sat as the chief guest, smiling, blind to misfortune, careless of days to come.

Above-stairs, in the journalist's home, Love also reigned, and here, too, was the deep happiness of perfect union; but with Gaston and Kathleen life was less calm than in the Durand household. Gaston was steeped to the lips in the fever of politics, was blown hither and thither, his soul tossed and agitated by every breath of the public whirlwind. He had friends here, there, and everywhere among the extreme Republican party; he believed in Rochefort, he worshipped Flourens, that hot headed enthusiast who just at this time was in command of five battalions of the National Guard, the beloved of Belleville and Menilmontant, a leader at whose beat of drum that seething populace were ready to rise as one man.

The Red Flag was loud in its reproaches against existing authorities. The Red Flag lauded Blanqui and the Blanquists, and was just now at the height of popularity, rivaling Felix Pyat's paper, Le Combat, and Blanqui's Patrie en Danger; and yet the day was to come when the Patrie en Danger would cease to charm, and the Red Flag would not be half red enough—would perish as an effete rag, too tame, too soft for the age of anarchy and death. The day was to come when every color would be too pale for Paris, save the deep dark hue of blood.

But at this time Paris had not yet begun to suppress its newspapers. The Red Flag was popular, and Gaston Mortemar was the most popular among its contributors. He was paid liberally for his work; for in this day of doubt and uncertainty the poorest could spare a couple of sous for a paper that told how France was being misgoverned, and called upon the supreme sovereign people—the Mirabeaus and Robespierres, and Dantons and Marats of Menilmontant, to arise in their might, and steer the tempest-driven ship of state safely—the ship of state—Gouvernement, Gouvernement, Gouvernement, what you will; every man his own master; no hereditary nobility, no landowners, no millionaires, a universal level of blue blouses and cheap wines.

And as woods and meadows were no, and autumn began to have a wintry aspect, and party rose against party, faction against faction, and agitation and fever were in the very air men breathed, Kathleen's breast was fluttered by many fears. In Gaston's absence she was never free from nervous apprehensions, from morbid imaginings. It was only in these brief intervals when he was at home, sitting at his desk, writing passionate vehement protests against this or that, prophecies of evil, wild suggestions for wilder action, bending over his paper with pale nervous face and flashing eyes, dipping his pen into the ink as if it were a stiletto stuck in the heart of the foe, writing as if Satan himself guided his pen, or snatching some hurried meal while the printer's devil ran off with the copy, to return an hour after with the proof—it was only then, when he was there, and she could stand beside him as he wrote, and twine her arms round his neck, or smooth his disordered hair, stooping now and then to kiss the troubled brow, that Kathleen felt her husband was safe. At all other times she thought of him as a mark for Prussian bullets or for private vengeance. She had visions of every kind of catastrophe that might befall him.

"O, how I pity the poor rich wives, the great ladies of Paris!" she said to Gaston one day as she sat on his knee, after their scanty meal, brushing back the rumpled hair from his forehead with two loving hands, looking down into the dark eyes which gave back her look of love; "how I pity them, poor things, sent away to Dieppe or to Etretat, to Arcachon or Trouville, parted from their husbands, languishing yonder in fear and trembling! Don't you think it was cruel of the husbands to send them away, Gaston?"

"No, dearest; unselfish rather than cruel. The women and children have been sent away from scarcity and danger, from trouble and fear. I wish you had let me send you to your old friends at the convent near Bruges, whose charity would have forgiven your flight, and who might have sheltered you in peace and security till this tempest should be overpast."

"Peace and security away from you? I should have broken my heart in a week. You could never have been cruel enough to send me away?"

"Do you suppose I would not rather have you here, pet?" he asked, looking up at her, drawing down the pale fair face to meet his own, and covering it with kisses; "the light of my home, the guardian angel of my life. The brief half-hours that we can spend together thus and thus and thus," with a kiss after each word, "are better than a year of commonplace comfort; our meal of bread and haricots is better than a dinner at Bignon's in the golden days of the Empire that is dead, when dining ranked among the fine arts. Did you read my last article in the Drapeau, Kathleen?" he asked in conclusion, with a little look which betrayed the vanity of the successful journalist—the man who believes that he moulds and makes public opinion.

"Did I read it?" cried Kathleen; "why, I read every word you write! There is no one so eloquent, no one else whose prose is so full of poetry—except, perhaps, Victor Hugo—but I like your style better than his," she added quickly, lest he should be offended; "only, Gaston, sometimes as I read I fear that you are not wise, that those grand glowing words of yours—words that burn like vitriol sometimes—may fire a train which will lead to an explosion, an explosion in which we all may perish. Think of all those people at Belleville and Menilmontant, and Montmartre and Clignancourt—many and many of them honest industrious souls, desiring only right and justice, but others steeped in crime, misery, hatred—a seething mass, fermenting in the corruption of idleness and sin—ready to arise like a poison cloud, and spread death and ruin over the city. Do you remember last Sunday, when we went for a long walk in those streets beyond the Boulevard Richard Lenoir? There were faces in the crowd, Gaston, that made me shudder, that made me cold with horror; faces of women as well as of men—yes, I think the women were worst—faces which haunted me afterwards."

"There are blouses and blouses, Kathleen," said Gaston at her earnestness. "You cannot expect that men and women who have toiled and grovelled for two-thirds of a lifetime in semi-starvation—who have seen all the splendors, and pleasures, and comforts of this world pass by, afar in the distance, no more to them than pictures in a magic-lantern—you can hardly expect that kind of clay to dress itself up in smiles on a Sunday afternoon, and to sing hymns of thankfulness to the Creator."

"I should not have been surprised that they looked discontented," said Kathleen, "but they all looked so wicked."

"Discontent and wickedness are very near akin," answered her husband. "When there is work for all, and food for all, you will see very few of those wicked faces. I am one of the Apostles of the Religion of Collectivism, and when that is the creed of France there shall be no more starvation, no more discontent, no great masses of wealth locked up in foreign loans or distant railways; no millionaires' palaces, with a million or so sunk in pictures and bric-a-brac; but the money won by the laborer shall be in the pocket of the laborer, and there shall be no such thing as stagnant capital. We have seen enough of Dives, in his purple and fine linen, Kathleen; it is time that Lazarus should have his turn. Dives means the individual: Lazarus means the nation."

"But if, when the Prussians have gone, you are going to do away with millionaires, who is to buy Philip's sideboard?" demanded Kathleen, perceiving that this paradise of Collectivism was not without its inconveniences.

"No one," answered Gaston lightly. "Philip is a fool to create such a white elephant. The age of personal luxury, pomp, and show, and wild expenditure was an outcome of the Empire; it meant rottenness and corruption, bribery, falsehood, debauchery, an age of courtiers and cocodettes, stock-jobbers and card-sharpers. In the age that is coming there will be no carved oak sideboards worth twenty thousand francs, no Gobelin tapestries, no Sevres porcelain. There will be a bit of beef in every man's pot-au-feu, a roof over every man's head, food and shelter, light and air, and cleanliness and comfort, and a free education for all."

"And it is towards this all your articles in the Drapeau tend?" asked Kathleen naively.

"To this, and to this only."

"I am so glad. I was afraid sometimes that you were urging the people to act as they acted in '93, when King and Queen, patriots and priests, and helpless innocent people weltered in their blood, yonder, on the Place de la Concorde."

"My dearest, I preach Communism, not Revolution," answered Gaston, in all good faith. "We have no princes to slay. We have got rid of Badinguet and all that canaille; we have a clear stage and no favor; and it will be our own fault if France does not rise regenerated, purified, chastened by her misfortune, a veritable Phœnix, from the ashes of ruined towns and villages, from the dry bones of a slaughtered army."

"And there will be nobody to buy poor Philip's sideboard," concluded Kathleen sorrowfully, full of regret for the enthusiast in the little workshop below stairs.

It seemed to Kathleen as if a world, in which there were no rich people to buy works of art, no beautiful women clad in satin and velvet, no splendid carriages drawn by thoroughbred horses, no palace windows shining across the dusk with the yellow light of myriad wax-candles, no gardens seen by fitful glimpses athwart shrubbery and iron railing, would be rather a dreary world to live in, albeit there was bread for all, and a kind of holy poverty, as of some severe monastic order, reigning everywhere.

CHAPTER VI.

ON THE RAMPARTS.

Paris was a camp; but so far it was but playing at soldiers, after all, for those within the walls; though there was plenty of hard fighting outside; and many a wounded Mobiot was carried to the ambulance on a litter, never to leave it alive; and many a mother's heart was tortured with fear for her sons; and many a Rachel wept for those that were not. But though the roar of cannon thundered, or grumbled sullen and dully in the distance, the National Guard within the walls had, what their American friends called, a good time. The watch upon the ramparts was the most onerous duty, and it was only the night-watch—the cold shelter of a tent, where the sentinel, returning from duty, generally found an intruder snoring upon his own particular knapsack, and under his own particular rug—which the hegest citizen soldier found in somewise hardship. For Gaston Mortemar, young, vigorous, full of enthusiasm, ready, like Flourens, to lead five battalions to the fray, if need were, the cold nights of October and the canvas quarters were as nothing. His mind was charged with enthusiasm as with electricity. That bitter defeat, that day of humiliation yonder, on the Belgian frontier, seemed to him the justice of the gods, the salvation of France. The Man of December and Sedan—it was thus Blanquists and Internationals spoke of the late Emperor—was dethroned. That Empire of cinquant and flourin had crumbled into dust, l' Infame fut servae, and France was free to achieve her glorious Destiny, as the liberator of the world, and to establish the millennium of Communism, the peaceful reign of blouses, blue and white, the apotheosis of Belleville and Menilmontant.

In many a fervid speech Gaston depicted the glories of that coming age, yonder at the club of the Folies Bergeres, at two steps from the Boulevard Montmartre, where the talk ranged ever from grave to gay, from the passionate oratory of the fanatic to the lowest deep of blague and buffoonery. There, and in the Salle Favre, and in many other such places, Gaston preached his gospel of free labor, every man his own master, every workman his own capitalist, no concentration of profits, no man permitted to grow rich by the sweat of another man's brow.

"The civilised world has outlived black slavery," he cried, "but so long as we still have white slavery—the slavery of the journeyman under the heel of the capitalist—there is no meaning in the word civilisation; there is no such thing on earth as justice."

He paced the ramparts, chassepot in hand, full of such thoughts, ready to repulse the Prussians, who had not the least idea of attacking bastion or curtain while the gradual work of exhaustion was going on within the charmed circle; and it was only a question of so many months, so many weeks, so many days, when starving Paris must surrender. Already there had been talk of an armistice, and already that heroic cry of Jules Favre, hurled like a gauntlet in the teeth of the enemy, "Not an inch of our territory, not a stone of our fortresses," sounded bitterest mockery.

Gaston's belief in the power of France against Germany was growing feebler every day; but his faith in the great French people, as represented by the blouses of Paris, and in the Commune, as the perfection of government, grew day by day. Were not the people showing every hour of what noble stuff they were made? See how steadily they faced the terrors of a beleaguered city, the deprivations of a state of siege. Behold their courage, their patience, their gay good temper. Drunk occasionally, perhaps; but what of that? Quarrelsome now and again, but in mere exuberance of an enthusiastic temperament. See how little the knife had been used in these occasional brawls—a coup de savate, a nose tweaked here and there, sufficed. The people showed themselves a nation of heroes.

It did not occur to Gaston Mortemar that Belleville and Menilmontant, Clignancourt and Montmartre, were getting a good time; that it was as if Bermondsey and Bethnal Green, Whitechapel and Clerkenwell, were having a universal holiday, while every man got fifteen-pence a day, and an allowance for his family, for doing nothing. At every street-corner there was a cluster of the National Guard, drinking, laughing, orating, playing the game of bouchon, an innocent little game of chance with the corks of their wine-bottles; everywhere, even on the boulevards, dim with the half-light of alternate lamps, there were sounds of laughter and gaiety; while day by day came tidings of some skirmish outside the walls, which had ended disastrously for those poor Mobiots, who had a knack of running away helter-skelter when they found themselves the focus of a circle of artillery.

It was early in October, and as yet there was no actual scarcity of food. Hardship and famine, the bitter cold of winter, were yet in the future. Luxuries were things to be remembered in the dreams of the epicure or the sensualist; but frugal Spartan fare was within reach of all who had a little money in the stocking, who had kept their poire pour la soif. The little children were not yet pining, sickening, fading off the earth for lack of a cup of milk, and the cremerie in the street round the corner was in full swing.

Suzon Michel's cremerie was something more than a cremerie in these days. It was almost a club. Communists, Internationalists, Collectivists, had their rendezvous in the little shop where Gaston Mortemar used to eat his breakfast in days gone by. The more temperate and respectable of the revolutionary party loved to assemble here. The fare was frugal, but there was a debauch of oratory; and, in the midst of all the talk, the gesticulations, the prophecies, the threatenings and denunciations, Suzon was as the Goddess of Liberty, the Muse of Revolution, the Egeria of the gutter. She had read of Theroigne de Mericourt, of Madame Roland, and she fancied herself something between the two. She talked as boldly, as loudly as the loudest of her customers. She felt that she could mount the scaffold, and lay her neck under the fatal knife without flinching.

Never had she looked handsomer than in these days of fever and commotion. Sometimes she twisted a scarlet handkerchief round her raven hair, and those black eyes of hers flashed and danced and sparkled under the Phrygian cap of Liberty. Her neat black gown fitted her svelte figure to perfection. Her energy, her vivacity, her industry were inexhaustible. Her hands were as the hands of Briareus for serving the patriots with their coffee, their rolls and butter. Her gay voice sounded above the other voices in the melee of wit and patriotism. She sang as she went to and fro among the little tables, waiting upon her patrons; and her song was always the newest ballad with which the balladmongers were undermining the government, the "Lillbullero" of the hour.

"Je sais le plan de Trochu, Plan, plan, plan, plan, plan!"

Sometimes, in a moment of exaltation, her customers would call for a stave of the "Marseillaise" or the "Ca ira," and then the clink of cups and saucers and knives and forks upon the tables was like the clash of swords.

But, tempting as these morning assemblies of the patriotic and the idle might be to a man of Gaston's temperament, he never crossed the threshold of Suzon Michel's shop. He passed her door twice a day, or oftener, on his way to and from the newspaper office; he heard the chorus of voices inside, but he never entered the shop. He had a feeling that loyalty to Kathleen forbade him to hold any commune with Suzon. And what need had he to take his cup of coffee from a shopkeeper's hand when the faithful wife was waiting for him in her bower on the third story, watching the little brass coffee-pot simmering upon a handful of charcoal? One could not be too sparing of fire in these days, though one were over so sure that the Prussians must retire from the enemy's soil before winter began in real earnest. The elements would fight upon the side of the besieged. That vast army, shivering yonder under canvas, must beat a retreat at double-quick time before Jack Frost.

It was on one of the clear gray afternoons of October that Gaston stood resting upon his gun, at his post on the rampart of the fort, gazing with dreamy eyes upon a landscape of poetic beauty, the deep rich coloring of the autumn subdued into perfect harmony by the tender mists which shadowed without concealing wood and river, vineyard and field, while far off in the dimness of the horizon his fancy conjured up the dark swarm of Prussian helmets, blackening the edge of the landscape. The atmosphere was full of peace, and the silence of this lonely outpost was broken only by the qui vive of the sentries and the chime of distant churchclocks. A good place for a poet to brood upon the creations of his fancy, or for a journalist to hatch a leading article.

While Gaston stood at ease, with his eyes wandering far afield towards the distant foe, and his fancies straying still further in a day-dream of universal peace, liberty, art for art's sake, and all the impossibilities of the socialist's Utopia, a sound of strident laughter, of deep bass voices and nasal trebles, broke like a volley of musketry through the stillness of the soft gray atmosphere, and presently half a dozen kepis, or National Guard, considerably the worse for le petit bleu, came swaggering along the rampart, escorting a young woman, whose scarlet headgear shone in the distance like a spot of flame.

It was Madame Michel, with the little red kerchief twisted coquettishly round her sleek black hair. She wore a tight cloth jacket, frogged a la militaire, over her black gown, the skirt of which was short enough to show an arched instep and a neat ankle. She had put on a half-virile, half-soldierly air, in honor of the times; and her walk, her look, her manner, were already prophetic of the coming petroleuse.

She came along the rampart with her patriots, who were pointing out the merits and faults of the fortifications, explaining, showing her this and that, swaggering, bragging, abusing Bismarck and his Pandours, singing snatches of patriotic verse. She was close to Gaston before she recognised him.

Then their eyes met, suddenly, his returning from the far distance, hers staring intently. Recognition came in a flash, and the rich carnation of her cheek faded to an almost deadly pallor.

"What, is it you, Citoyen Mortemar, so far from the Rue Git le Cœur? What, are you too in the National Guard? I thought so devoted a husband would have found an excuse from service. I thought you would be lying at the feet of your English-Irish wife all day, like Paul and Virginia in their far-off island."

"The nation cannot spare even lovers," swered Gaston lightly. "Hector had to 've Andromache; and my Andromache 'd despise a husband who did less than his duty. So far our duties have been light enough, and give no ground for boasting."

"But let them come on, those Uhlans, those gredins, those—" here came a string of double-barrelled substantive adjectives and adjective substantives, too familiar afterwards in Le Pere Duchene—"let them come!" growled the wine-soaked patriot, "and we will give them—"ces nom! what is there which we will not give them?"

And then the tipsy patriots retired to an angle of the fortification, and began to play the intellectual game of bouchon, forgetful of the lady whom they had escorted so far, for an afternoon on the walls of Paris.

Gaston shouldered his chassepot, and began to walk slowly up and down. Suzon followed him, came close to his side, and hissed in his ear.

"And so you are happy with your child wife?"

"I am as happy as Fate ever allowed a man to be in this world. Fate gave me the fairest and best for my companion, and then said, 'Thou shalt find thou hast filled thy cup of joy in a day of trouble and war. Thou shalt drink only a drop at a time—a drop now and then—as the miser spends his gold.'"

"Lucky for you, lucky for her that it is so," retorted Suzon fiercely, "for you may so much less soon grow weary of your waxwork wife."

"I shall never weary of her," said Gaston. "Every day draws us nearer. We may tire of life and its troubles, never of each other."

"So you think now, while this fancy of yours has all the gloss of freshness. But you will weary of her. She is pretty enough, I grant you; lovely, if you like; but her face has no more expression than a June lily; and you, who have a mind full of force and fire, must weary of such placid inanity. Do you think I do not know you—I who have heard you talk in the days gone by—I who was your confidante when you were penniless and unknown? You are beginning to be famous now. You sign your articles, and men talk about them and about the writer. You are pointed at in the street. But I admired you, I believed in you when you were nobody."

"You were always very amiable, citoyenne, and I hope I did not prove myself unworthy of your esteem," said Gaston, with a ceremonious bow.

He had an idea that a storm was coming, and he wanted to ward off the lightning if possible, by taking things easily.

"You proved yourself a seducer and a liar!" she answered savagely, her splendid eyes flaming as she looked at him, one red spot on either cheek, like a burning coal, her white lips quivering.

Catarrh A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished, he claims the Catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favourable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.—Montreal Star, Nov. 17, 1883. 48-52t

The decided beneficial effect of Robinson's Phosphorized Emulsion in the treatment of female weakness, and nervous prostration, has given it a wide-spread reputation, and in every case the story is the same: "My health is so improved since using it." The coldest weather ever experienced in the North-West was at Fort Benton in 1880, when the thermometer marked 59 degrees below zero.

Nothing so suddenly obstructs the prespiration as sudden transitions from heat to cold. Heat rarifies the blood, quickens the circulation and increases the perspiration, but when these are suddenly chocked the consequences must be bad. The most common cause of disease is obstructed perspiration or what commonly goes by the name of catching cold. Coughs, colds, sore throat, etc., if attended to in time are easily subdued, but if allowed to run their own course, generally prove the fore-runner of more dangerous diseases. Nine-tenths of the consumptives date their affliction from a neglected cold, and the diseases that are caused by wet feet, damp clothes, or exposure are more numerous than are generally supposed. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, which frees the lungs from viscid phlegm by changing the secretions from a diseased to a healthy state.

A Lucky Man.

"A lucky man is more than a white crow," says Juvenal, and we think he knew. However, we have heard of thousands of lucky ones and we propose to let their names out. They were poor creatures once in health, suffering with liver, blood and skin diseases, dyspepsy and consumption, and were lucky enough to hear of and when enough to use Dr Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," the sovereign blood purifier, tonic and alterative of the age.

COST OF CARS.

An express train of eight cars is valued at $60,760; the engine and tender at $20,000, the baggage car at $1,250, the postal car at $6,000, the smoker at $2,250, the two passenger cars at $6,000 each, and three palace cars at $12,000 each.

WIGGINS' WEATHER WISDOM.

Wiggins, the weather man is on deck again with a tremendous storm, including a tornado, cyclone, typhoon, hurricane and other auriviled abnormalities. Wiggins' reputation as a weather prophet, and Sir John's as a constitutional lawyer would make a great team.

An Answer Wanted.

Can any one bring us a case of Kidney or Liver Complaint that Electric Bitters will not speedily cure? BRITISH POLITICS.

A special to the Press gives the views of an ardent politician on the outlook of English home politics. He believes that an amalgamation of the moderate men of both the existing parties will be formed to oppose Mr. Parnell's demands for home rule for Ireland, and to neutralize the balance of power which he will likely hold under the operations of the Franchise and Redistribution Acts.

Results Tell.

The proof of the pudding is the eating, and the proof of the extraordinary power over pain of Polson's Nerviline is in using it. Polson's Nerviline never fails to perform wonders in every case of pain. It cannot fail, for it is composed of powerful pain subduing remedies. It goes right to the bottom, and pain is banished at once Nerviline cures all kind of pain, internal or external. Go to any drug store and get a 10 or 25 cent bottle, and be delighted by its promptitude in doing its work.

FRESH SALT WATER.

Far out at sea, along both the Gulf and Atlantic coasts of Florida, says the Savannah (Ga.) News, are several springs of fresh water. They are well known to the spongers and fishermen, who frequently visit them to replenish their water casks. On this same coast is an oil spring which diffuses a calm over troubled waters, and affords a refuge to small vessels during a gale.

An Enterprising, Reliable House.

Taylor & McDonald can always be relied upon, not only to carry in stock the best of everything, but to secure the agency for such articles as have well known merit, and are popular with the people, thereby sustaining the reputation of being always enterprising, and ever reliable. It will surely cure any and every affection of Throat, Lungs and Chest, and to show our confidence, we invite you to call and get a Trial Bottle Free.

CHINESE CLEVERNESS.

Not long since the Chinese began to fortify a small island in the river at Foo Chow. After they had spent upward of $1,000,000 upon the works they began the anxious query of where the garrison would retreat to in case the act became advisable. They could find no place, and so they abandoned their six million-dollar works, their plans and the island.

Wheeler's Tissue Phosphates.

It should be more generally understood among invalids that medicine, like heat, is a mode of motion or form of potential energy, which is set free when taken into the system, according to its chemical affinities. It possesses no cure-all nor specific properties, but aids nature by increasing the functional activity of the vital organs, which secures the digestion and assimilation of food, the only radical panacea we have in all forms of disease. The special value of WHEELER'S PHOSPHATES AND CALISAYA consists in its being both medicine and food, containing agents that create nerve force, and tissue elements for repair.

A SENSIBLE PLAN.

Those who are victims of sea sickness while crossing the ocean will rejoice to learn that a steamship line has adopted the policy of feeding its passengers on the "European plan" of letting each one have and pay for just what he wants. Conveyance across is to be one item in the bill, and meals, attendance, etc., will comprise the balance. No more waste of money for meals never consumed.

Complain as We May

about our lot in life, we cannot deny that any are exempt by their position from the common lot of pain and suffering. The highest as well as the most humble must be ever on the alert to take advantage of such means as will relieve when pain makes relief a necessity to our comfort. By a letter from "Government House, Ottawa," asking for a supply of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor, we are reminded of two things: first that corns are universal, and secondly that Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor is recognized by all classes as the most certain painless, and non-poisonous remedy, for corns. Beware of the article just as good, and use only Putnam's Extractor.

A CURIOUS COW.

There is a cow in London that knows a thing or two, and has a very sweet tooth. She has been known to follow a confectioner's sleigh to several stores and help herself to candies. The other day the peddler caught her in the act, drove her off and locked the box. The cow returned and waited patiently until the driver was in the act of getting into the sleigh, when she took her revenge by turning like lightning and kicking the unfortunate man clean into and out of the sleigh, and then made off quite contentedly.

HE EXPLAINS THE BLACK EYE.

"Johnnie, have you been fighting?" gravely inquired Mrs. Muggins.

"No ma'am," promptly answered the heir of the Mugginses.

"John Muggins, how dare you tell me an untruth!" exclaimed his mother. "Where did you get that black eye, sir?"

"I traded another boy two front teeth and a broken nose for it," replied Johnnie as he crossed the woodpile.

LINDSAY.

To such an extent has coal become the fuel of the town that a decided fall in the price of wood has taken place.

Mr. Thomas Adam recently purchased for his stock farm, two miles north of Lindsay, a ten-months old bull and a fine cow, both thoroughbred from the well-known stock farm of Mr. D. Jackson (Stonefield), Eldon. The bull is a rich red roan, fashionably bred, and the cow is better known as "Cambray Maid." Both commanded fancy figures. Mr. Adam's enterprise has resulted in a very important addition to the stock of the neighborhood and we trust his enterprise will be appreciated—Post.

The Rime of Sir Lionne.

Hush, a little, for harp and rhyme;
This befell in the olden time.
—W. Allingham.

In days of old, as rimesters tell
(Calvert, and petrel, and mangonel),
A maiden dwelt in a castle stout,
Guarded and walled, within, without,
And ever defiant and direful rout
To all her castle's besiegers fell.

No suitor the maid's proud heart could win,
(Pike, and halberd, and culverin);
She recked not of love-kiss, no vow, no sigh,
But her song had the ring of a battle-cry;
"O, strong is my fortress—a maid am I—
And never a foeman shall enter in."

But it fell 1st an evening windy-wet
(Harberk, and helmet, and bracinet),
A knight drew rein 'neath the castle wall;
Proud was his port, his stature tall,
His face held the gazer's eye in thrall,
And a lion of gold on his casque was set.

He winded a bugle silver-clear
(Mace, and arbalest, and bandoleer),
Singing: "Yield up thy castle, fair May, to me!
Sir Lionne me hight, of a far countrie.
Now hear me thee, lady, my love to be,
Or I take thee by prowess of bow and spear."

In the pale, pale light of a crescent moon
(Sapps, and counslet, and musketoon),
She saw him there by the castle wall,
And shrilled to the warder a careless call:
"Ho—let portcullis and drawbridge fall;
We would see this bold knight of a braggart tune."

And oh! but the wind had changed, I trow
(Falchion, and gauntlet, and good crossbow),
When, an eve from thence, in a fading light,
On the bastion-keep stood a maid and knight,
And, while to his heart he clasped her tight,
"Thou hast conquered, Sir Lionne!" she murmured low.

"I had vowed that no knight beneath the sun
(Demi-pique, helm, and habergeon),
Beneath the sunlight, or moonbeam shine,
Should be lord of this castle and heart of mine!
But take me, dear love, I am only thine;
My fortress is taken, my heart is won."
—Chambers' Journal.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

History of Many of the Granite Blocks that Make Up the Grand Pile.

The last stones in the sides of the Washington Monument having been laid, a study of the stones sent by the various States and cities of this country, and by a number of foreign nations, for position in the monument, is interesting. About half of the number contributed have already been put in position in the walls of the monument, and the remainder lie under a shed, the "lapidarium" at the monument grounds. Those used when the work was begun years ago were set in the walls inside the monument. The remainder are awaiting notion. When the present engineering force took hold of the monument it was decided to put no more of the stones into the wall as it was being built, but to await the completion of the monument proper and then bolt the blocks to the inside of the walls at points just above the LANDING OF THE STAIRWAYS.

This will probably be done after the roof is completed. The plan is to slice the front of each block off and bolt it securely to the walls, as indicated above. It is probable, however, that not all the stones sent will be put into the monument, as there are many from societies now out of existence, and others of such character as to make their use of doubtful propriety. There is, for instance, one from some enterprising firm of stone-cutters in New York, handsomely dressed and ornamented with some fine work, and bearing the name of the generous firm which contributed it.

There are numbers from stone-cutters' unions and other organizations. Of this class many have long since passed out of existence. Typographic unions, military and fire organizations, lodges of the various secret societies, and others of this sort are numerous. Of the 160 stones received it is probable that more than 100 will be placed in the inside of the monument, in view of the visitors.

ALL OF THE STATES

and Territories but two or three have already sent stones, and the others are expected to follow before the work is completed. Many foreign nations are also represented in the collection. China, for instance, has sent a handsome block, bearing a long inscription in Chinese characters, recounting the virtues and heroic qualities of Washington, and after comparing him to China's greatest men, winds up by saying he was greater than any of them.

Japan also sends a stone. So does Switzerland. So do numerous other governments abroad. Great Britain is, however, conspicuous by her absence, as are also Germany and France. A block of marble sent by the Pope, appropriately inscribed, was the object of so much hatred in Know-nothing days that it was finally lost to the monument, having been broken in pieces and thrown in the Potomac by a band of disguised men, whose identity has never been revealed. One very interesting contribution from abroad is sent by William Terrell, of Georgia, when he was Consul. It is very heavy, 3½x1½ feet, a pale, blue color, and strongly impregnated with sulphur. Besides the blocks from private sources and from associations now extinct there are numbers from National and State grand lodges of Odd Fellows and Masons, some of them very handsome; those from Masons especially so. Those from the cities of New York and Philadelphia are quite handsome.

The blocks sent by States have usually a State coat of arms upon them with some appropriate inscription. Some, however, have only the name of the State out in large letters. This is the case with Maine, Minnesota, and South Carolina. Maine's block is of granite, four by two feet, bearing the single word, "Maine." South Carolina has only the name of the State with the State coat of arms. The block was defaced by some vandal hands after it arrived here, but has been repaired. Most of the Southern States were rather demonstrative in their and some of their inscriptions read rather curiously in the light of events which have transpired since they were presented. Louisiana's block, which was sent before the war, bears "The State of Louisiana, ever faithful to the Constitution and the Union."

It is a curious fact that the stone thus sent and inscribed crumbled away after Louisiana had violated the pledge she had placed upon it. It has since been replaced by a block of marble bearing the same inscription. Georgia has upon the inscribed stone which she sent, "The Union as it was, the constitution as it is." Alabama's block, which is of a native marble, bears the words, "A Union of equality as adjusted by the Constitution." Florida sent a stone bearing her coat of arms and inscribed, "Florida sees in his counsels safety, in his life an example, in his memory a perpetual bond of Union." Tennessee sends a beautiful block of native marble bearing the words, "The Federal Union, it must be preserved." The block sent by Kentucky has the figures of Clay and Crittenden, with hands clasped, cut in the face of the block: "Under the auspices of heaven and the precepts of Washington, Kentucky will be the last to give up the Union." Missouri has inscribed upon her offering:

"THE TRIBUTE OF MISSOURI to the memory of Washington and the pledge of her fidelity to the Union of the States." Illinois has the sentiment, "Illinois: State Sovereignty and National Union," which one might expect to see coming from a Southern State. Indiana furnishes the following: "Indiana knows no North, no South, nothing but Union." Ohio's limestone block has "The State of Ohio; the memory of Washington and the Union of the States. Sunto perpetua." Wisconsin's block is four by two feet, bearing the words, "Wisconsin, admitted May 20, 1841." Minnesota is represented by a small block of her famous pipe-clay set in a handsome block of marble and bearing the single word "Minnesota." Iowa's offering is a handsome limestone block inscribed "Iowa. Her affections, like the river of her borders, flow to an inseparable Union." Brigham Young sent, long before his death, a stone bearing the Utah coat-of-arms, and inscribed, "Holiness to the Lord," and below the single word, "Deseret." A plain stone, marked "Cherokee Nation," shows the regard of the Cherokees for the government. Virginia sends three blocks. One of them is labeled, "Westmoreland County, the birthplace of Washington;" another marked, "Virginia, who gave Washington to the country, gives this granite to his monument," and the third inscribed, "From Otter's summit, Virginia's loftiest peak, to crown the monument of Virginia's noblest son."—Cincinnati Times-Star.

The Appearance of a Sun Spot.

Professor Langley, of the Alleghany Observatory, will contribute to the Century a series of popular illustrated papers on "The New Astronomy." His first article, in the September number, treats of the spots on the sun, and of one of the spots he says: "There were wonderful fern-like forms in this spot, too, and an appearance like that of pine-boughs covered with snow; for, strangely enough, the intense whiteness of the solar surface, in the best telescopes, constantly suggests cold. I have had the same impression vividly in looking at the immense masses of molten-white iron in a great puddling furnace. The salient feature here is one very difficult to see, even in good telescopes, but one which is of great interest. It has been shown in the previous drawings, but we have not enlarged on it. Everywhere in the spot are long white threads, or filaments, lying upon one another, tending in a general sense toward the center, and each of which grows brighter toward its inner extremity. These make up, in fact, as we now see, the penumbra, or outer shade, and the so-called 'crystal' is really affiliated to them. Besides this, on close looking we see that the inner shade, or umbra, and the very deepest shades, or nuclei, are really made of them, too. We can look into the dark center, as into a funnel, to the depth of probably over five thousand miles; but as far as we may go down we come to no liquid or solid floor, and see only volumes of whirling vapor, disposed not vaguely like our clouds, but in the singularly definite, fern-like, flower-like forms which are themselves made of these 'filaments,' each of which is from three to five thousand miles long, and from fifty to two hundred miles thick, and each of which (as we saw in the first spot) appears to be made up like a rope, of still finer and finer strands, looking, in the rare instants when irradiation makes an isolated one visible, like a thread of gossamer, or the finest of cobweb. These suggest the fine threads of spun glass; and here there is something more than a mere resemblance of form, for both appear to have one casual feature in common, due to a viscous or 'sticky' fluid; for there is much reason to believe that the solar atmosphere, even where thinner than our own air, is rendered viscous by the enormous heat, and owes to this its tendency to pull out in strings, in common with such otherwise dissimilar things, as honey, or melted sugar, or melted glass."

The Origin of the "Blue Book."

Peter Force, a New York journeyman printer, came to Washington in 1815, became the proprietor of a printing office, and originated, and for some years compiled without charge, the "Biennial Register," better known from the color of its binding as the "Blue Book," of which the government purchased a small number of copies. Fond of American history, he in time collected a large quantity of rare books and pamphlets, many of which had been thrown away from the executive departments as rubbish, and purchased by him of the dealers in waste paper. In 1833 he originated the idea of compiling and publishing a documentary history of the country under the title of "The American Archives," and in order to secure the necessary appropriation from Congress he associated himself with Matthew St. Clair Clarke, the Clerk of the House of Representatives. This publication was a "job," which distributed considerable sums of money, for a number of years, among the politicians at Washington, but it was the only way in which Mr. Force could carry out his plan, and he was not enriched by it. He was instinctively a gentleman and a worthy disciple of Faust—tall, stalwart, with a bushy head of hair and keen eyes, which would beam with joy when anyone brought him a rare autograph or pamphlet. The simplicity of his manners, bearing an expression of the gentleness and purity of his heart, made him beloved, as well as revered, by all who knew him. After his death Congress purchased his collection of books and manuscripts, and it now graces the Congressional Library.—Boston Budget.

A patent medicine manufacturer died in New York last week. Before he died his friends asked him how he would like to be buried. He had just strength left to say, "Insert me top column next to reading matter 52 times, electro by mail," and then he closed his eyes and passed away to that bourne where there are no omissions nor wrong insertions. —Texas Siftings.

The decent people of Idaho, A. T., and adjacent Territories are alarmed at the inroads Mormonism is making into that section of the country.

Y. M. C. A. Lecture.

On Thursday evening, Rev. Alex. Bell, lectured in the Y. M. C. A. Hall, to a fair audience. Mr. D. B. Gardner in the chair. The subject was "A wise man and his sayings." And the great lesson that Solomon learned was "Fear God and keep His commandments." The study of his proverbs was commended to the young, as fitted to every condition of life.

St. John's C.E.T.S.

A very pleasant and successful entertainment was held on Thursday evening, in the school room. The Floral Society.

The Floral Society of Charlotte street Methodist church gave another of their delightful entertainments on Friday night. Mr. Manning occupied the chair, and a very creditable programme was presented. A Gorgeous Wareroom.

Mr. D. Belleghem, in pursuance of a policy of enterprise that places him in the lead of his business, has imported a mammoth British mirror plate to be placed in the rear of his large warerooms. The plate is so large that it could not be placed in a box car, so that a flat car had to be specially chartered for its transportation. The mirror will be so placed that it will reduplicate the immense stock of furniture in the wareroom in front of it. Beautiful as that display is now, it will be doubly so when the mammoth mirror is placed in position.

Real Estate Purchase.

On Thursday last the purchase of the extensive real estate interests of Mr. Wm. Cluxton, in Peterborough, was made by Mr. George A Cox. The property consists of the family residence and grounds at the head of Simcoe street, the "Cluxton Block," corner of George and Hunter streets, extending from Mr. Hackett's store on George street to and including Darcy's hotel on Hunter street; the Stewart House Block, corner of Hunter and Water streets, including the stables and yards on Water street, and extending west on Hunter street as far as W. J. Devlin's harness shop, inclusive; the shop on George street occupied by Mr. Jas. Best, and the sheds and stables on Chambers street, used as stables for Darcy's hotel. The Stewart House and Darcy's hotel will be closed as hotels, as Mr. Cox, we understand, declines to allow any property of his to be used for the sale of intoxicating liquors. By this and other heavy real estate investments, Mr. Cox is showing unbounded confidence in the future prosperity and growth of Peterborough.

Important Stock Sale.

Messrs. Thomas and John Graham, of Cavan, have decided to hold an auction sale of thorough-bred and grade stock, implements and household effects, on lot 13, 8th concession of Cavan, near Cavanville. The thorough-bred stock to be offered will especially present a great attraction. In horses, it includes the following thorough-bred and high bred stallions: The imported heavy draught stallion, "Enterprise," age 7 years. The imported English bred draught stallion, "Parole," 3 years old. The agricultural stallion, "Comet," aged. The Canadian draught stallion, "Heart of Oak." The coach horse, "British Splendor," 3 years old. These stallions have all a big record both as foal-getters and prize-winners, and present a grand chance to purchasers. Besides there will be offered eight other horses and colts, all of superior merit. In horned cattle there will be sold a splendid Durham cow and bull calf, both with pedigrees, and thirteen other cows, heifers and calves, all good grade stock. Also thirty prime bred Leicester and Cotswold sheep; also a fine lot of Berkshire boars and sows, besides a large quantity of good farming implements and household effects. The public on the look out for first-class investments in horses, cattle or sheep, will find this sale present a splendid opportunity. Further particulars may be learned from catalogues and large bills. The date of the sale is Tuesday Feb. 24th.

A Loss to the Town.

We regret to learn that Peterborough has lost by removal, one of its most estimable and useful citizens in the person of Mr. J. Frith Jeffers. He has received the appointment of General Manager of the British Empire Mutual Life Assurance Company, and his headquarters and, of course, residence, will, hereafter, be in London, Ont. Mr. Jeffers has lived ten years in Peterborough. He was appointed classical master of the Collegiate Institute in 1875, and in the following year promoted to the headmastership. In 1881 he resigned this position to become Auditor of the Midland Railway Company, and when that railway became amalgamated with the Grand Trunt, he took an engagment as inspector of the Canada Life, which he resigned to accept the present position. Mr. Jeffers departure from Peterborough will be greatly felt especially in religious circles, for he was active in every good work. He was superintendent of the Charlotte Street Church Sunday School, and only the school and the church can properly appreciate the loss sustained. He was also President of the Y. M. C. A., and took a most earnest interest in the promotion of its affairs and objects. Both Mr. and Mrs. Jeffers will be greatly missed in church and social circle, where their many amiable qualities won them hosts of friends. We wish them all success in their new sphere and home.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

Mr Stratton, on behalf of the Special Committee appointed to confer with the County Council, submitted the following report:—

The special committee appointed to interview the County Council in reference to a grant to the Collegiate Institute, beg to report as follows:—

That Messrs. Stevenson and Stratton waited upon the County Council during their late sittings, for this purpose, and were kindly permitted to address them in reference to the subject matter of their visit. And your committee beg to state that a special grant of $750.00 was made to the Institute by the Council, on condition that county pupils be allowed to attend the Collegiate Institute on the same terms as town pupils, and that no fee should be charged to entrance examination pupils. And therefore your committee recommend that all resolutions of this Board which impose any specific fees upon county pupils other than those imposed upon town pupils, be rescinded, and that a resolution be passed by this Board admitting county pupils on the same terms as town pupils into the Collegiate Institute, and asserting that no examination fees be imposed upon entrance examination pupils.

Your committee wish further to thank the County Council for their kindness and courtesy in receiving your committee, and in addition wish to recognize the liberality of the Ashburnham Council in having heretofore made a special yearly grant of $125 to our Institute.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. STEVENSON,
J. R. STRATTON.

The report was adopted.

MEMORIALIZING THE LEGISLATURE.

Mr. Dumble read a memorial to be presented to the Legislature of Ontario in reference to schools.

THE NEW SCHOOL BOOKS.

Mr. Deane moved, seconded by Mr. Kendry, that no change in books before the first of January, 1886, be allowed without further orders by this Board.

In amendment, it was moved by Mr. Stratton, seconded by Mr. Millar, that the Principal of the Public Schools of the town be permitted to introduce the new authorized [illegible] advancement of the Public School system.

In supporting the amendment, Mr. Stratton held that as the Government fixed the date for the introduction of the new books not later than the first of January, 1886, it would be much more economical for parents to have the books introduced gradually, especially as these presented would have to get new books, and it would be nothing more than a useless waste of money to buy the old series now or during the year and have to throw them away at the commencement of next year and replace them with the new series.

Mr. Dumble coincided with Mr. Stratton's views, believing the gradual introduction of the new books to be for the best interests of the schools as well as for the benefit of parents.

Mr. Deane thought that while the law allowed the use of the old series till 1886, no change should be made till then. The booksellers should also be considered. They had large stocks on hand, and they should be allowed time to get them worked off.

The Chairman held that the Board should look to the interests of the booksellers. It was unfair to them to introduce the new books now, while the law allowed the use of the old ones for the present year. They had large stocks on hand and should be given an opportunity to clear them out.

Mr. Stratton thought the duty of the Board was to look after the interests of the pupils, and parents and the well-being of the schools, not the interests of the booksellers.

Mr. Thomas Menzies was heard before the Board. He asked the Board to give him and the other booksellers of the town time to clear off their present stock, and as the law allows of the use of the present series until the 1st of January next, it would be unjust and unfair to introduce the new readers till that date.

Mr. Millar asked what would those pupils do who had purchased the new readers?

Mr. Mennies said he would exchange them without charge.

The amendment on being put was declared lost, and the original motion carried.

IDA.

On the 28th ult. Mr. Moses Sutton of Cavanville was united in marriage to Miss Annie Staples at her father's residence, "Elm Grove Farm," Ida. The groom was supported by Mr. John Whitfield, and the bride by Miss Staples of Millbrook. After the ceremony followed the wedding breakfast, then the happy couple took their departure for a trip east, leaving a host of friends and well wishers to spend a pleasant and enjoyable evening. The older ones chatted over the past, and the youthful the future. The bride was the recipient of many handsome and costly presents. We join their friends in wishing them one and both many happy and prosperous years, and may all their troubles keep a week's march behind.

MOUNT PLEASANT.

Very few of those who attended the Good Templar's entertainment last Thursday evening expected to see the programme presented in as complete a manner as proved to be the case. Those who took part were local amateurs, and the way they carried out their respective characters is greatly to their credit. When all did so well it is unnecessary to particularize, for the acting of every one was above the average of amateurs. The tableaux were very striking, and were presented with pleasing effect. We must not omit to compliment the band, which rendered several selections in a very acceptable manner. At the door they took in $26.50 of wealth.

SPRINGVILLE.

Last Thursday evening the inhabitants of Springville and vicinity were in a whirl of excitement over a "muffin struggle," held in the church. Tea was served from 5 to 7 o'clock, and many there were to eat thereof. There was everything in the shape of goodies that a hungry person could wish for. Dishes being washed and each getting into as comfortable a position as the place afforded, the show opened with an anthem from the St. Paul's choir. Rev. Mr. Bennet occupied the chair, order was good and everything went lovingly.

The programme consisted of songs, duets, readings, recitations and a trio from Messrs. Miller did gallantly on the Moore which brought down the house.

About 9 o'clock the programme was finished. Each one plodding his way home, feeling well satisfied with the investment. Proceeds, $41,50.

The Central Canada Loan and Savings Company of Ontario.

FIRST REPORT OF THE DIRECTORS.

The first annual meeting of the shareholders of the above company, was held at the company's office, on the 3rd February, at half-past three o'clock, when the following report was presented:

First annual Report of the Directors of the Central Canada Loan and Savings Company of Ontario, submitted to the Annual General Meeting of Shareholders, held at Peterboro', on the 3rd of February, 1885.

The Directors in submitting a report of the operations of the Company, for the nine months ending 31st December, 1884, accompanied by the Balance Sheet to that date, duly audited, entertain the hope that the result will be satisfactory to the shareholders.

It was decided at the first meeting of the shareholders to limit the issue of stock, for some time at least, to $300,000. That amount was promptly subscribed, and at the 31st December $300,100.56 was paid up. Several applications having since been made for stock by persons whom it would be desirable to have interested in the future of the Company; the Directors would now recommend a further issue of stock to the amount of one hundred thousand dollars.

From the net profits of the period under review, your Directors have been enabled, after defraying all preliminary expenses in the organization of the Company, and expenses of management, to pay a dividend at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, from the date of payment by each shareholder to the close of the year, leaving a balance at the credit of Profit and Loss Account of $2,968.74.

The steady demand for money on first-class securities, the marked preference of borrowers to deal with Home Companies, and the favour with which this Company has already been received, both by the investing and borrowing public, afford every reason to hope for a prosperous and successful career.

The Directors will continue to exercise the utmost precaution in the selection of their investments.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

GEO. A. COX,
President.

"Welcoming" the Wardenship.

County Councillors Congregate, Congratulate their Chosen Chief and Consummate his Chosen.

On Wednesday night of last week, Mr. E. C. Strickland, the newly elected warden, resumed the pleasant custom of the "Warden's dinner." The spread, a most sumptious and creditable one, was held in the dining hall of the Stewart House, and the whole arrangement reflected credit on mine host Cavanagh. There were, besides the councillors, several prominent citizens and personal friends of the host present.

Mr. Strickland occupied the chair, supported on either side by Messrs. Mayor Cox and Councillor Cahill. Mr. Burnham, M. P., occupied the vice-chair, having on his right and left, Messrs. H. Calcutt and H. T. Strickland.

The chairman proposed the first toast, "The Queen," which was drunk with great enthusiasm; song "God Save the Queen."

"The Lieutenant-Governor and Local Legislature," was responded to in a neat speech by Dr. Kincaid, ex-M. P. P.

"The Governor-General and the House of Commons" was replied to by Mr. Burnham, M. P. and Mr. Mayor Cox in brief speeches.

"The Army, Navy and Volunteers," found a warm advocate and admirer in Mr. H. Calcutt, who complimented the new and valuable allies England had found in the Canadian contingent in Egypt.

"Our Dominion" was most cordially drunk. Song—comic, "The Willow Tree," Mr. Bowman. Mr. M. Sanderson, ex-warden, held that Canada was as prosperous as any country in the world, and Mr. T. Menzies, town councillor, pointed out the advancement the country had made, and the important part played by our railway system.

"Our County and Town" was warmly received. Mr. Mayor Cox said he saw no town he liked so well as Peterborough, and a residence of 26 years had only confirmed his affection for and his faith in it. He believed it would soon be a city. Speaking of the Trent Valley Canal, he hinted that he might view with favor even the present Government at Ottawa if they would build this work. Mr. James Stevenson gave a sketch of the progress of the town for the past forty years, and urged that the town and county should heartily co-operate, for their interests were mutual. He hinted at factories that were likely to soon be established, and concluded by saying that he would like to see the town and county again one corporation.

Mr. Cahill, councillor, fully endorsed what had been said, and was sure that a good feeling between town and county was for the good of both.

"Our Educational Interests" found an able advocate in Mr. J. Coyle Brown, I. P. S. He advocated liberal grants by the county council to the Norwood High School and to the Collegiate Institute.

"The Learned Professions" were replied to by Messrs. Edmison Roger, and J. E. Belcher.

"Our Agricultural and Commercial Interests" were responded to by Mr. John Moloney, ex-warden, and Mr. Stephenson of Norwood.

"The Ladies" was heartily honored, and appropriate responses were made by Mr. Pearse, County Clerk, Mr. Roger and Mr. Stephenson, Asphodel.

"The Press" brought responses from Mr. J. R. Stratton, of the EXAMINER and Mr. Choate, representative of the Review.

The health of the Warden was proposed and enthusiastically honored. Mr. Strickland made a happy and humorous speech in reply.

The occasion was a most enjoyable one, and all the speakers congratulated the warden on his new honor, the best of feeling throughout being manifested.

"Our Host and Hostess," responded to by Mr. Cavanaugh, was followed by "Auld Lan Syne," and "God Save the Queen," and the happy company separated at an early hour on Thursday morning.

Opened out last week at Turnbull's, several bales of Grey Cotton. Now is the time to buy Cheap Cottons at Turnbull's.

In light Brahmas, Messrs. T. E. Bell and A. H. Ratcham showed coops of good fowls. Mr. John McClelland and W. D. Strickland, Lakefield, show some good chicks. In dark Brahmas, Mr. James Baptie, Springville, and Mr. J. L. Clapp, Belleville, are exhibitors, both in fowls and chicks. Buff Cochins were well represented by Mr. Clapp, in fowls, while Mr. John McClelland had fine samples of chicks. In Partridge Cochin fowls, Messrs. Baptie and Clapp have the field to themselves, the latter also showing chicks in this class. In Langshan fowls, Mr. N. Lush, of course, is a large exhibitor, and Mr. Danubus, Lakefield; these as well as A. Watts, Warsaw, K. Meade and W. D. Strickland, showing chicks in this class. The exhibitors in Plymouth Rock fowls, were Messrs. Baptie, Kydd & Wright, Bowmanville, and Clapp. In chicks of this class there was keen competition, there being eight entries. Mr. W. J. Wolfe, Bowmanville, had white Leghorn fowls to himself, while in chicks there were four exhibitors. Messrs. Baptie and Clapp competed in brown Leghorn fowls and chicks. Mr. Thos. E. Bell was alone in Houdan fowls, while Mr. Wolfe was with him in chicks. In B. B. Red game fowls, Messrs. Clapp, Daubuz and E. E. Henderson competed; in chicks Messrs. D. Mason, C. Brown and E. K. Henderson; Kydd Wright showed Silver Duckwing Games, Messrs. Baptie, Clapp and T. & J. Graham exhibited Golden Spangled Hamburgs. Golden Pencilled Hamburgs were shown by Messrs. Clapp and J. M. Hern. Messrs. Clapp and Baptie showed Silver Spangled Hamburgs. Messrs W. A. Pope, Kydd & Wright showed White Crested Poland chicks. There were four entries of Black Red Game Bantams. Messrs. A. R. Kydd, W. D. Strickland and J. L. Clapp showed Rouen ducks. In Pekin ducks there was a lively competition, seven entries. The show of geese was not large. Bronze Turkeys was well filled, Mr. A. R. Kydd, Dummer, showing a fine pair. On the whole the exhibition comprised birds of a superior quality. The prize list will appear in our next issue.

KEENE.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Snow and sleet, with gales and breezes, now a rain, and then it freezes, causing universal sneezes. Lady directress at work again: witness, a blinding snowstorm from the west as we write.

Scarlet fever has appeared in the family of Mr. J. Wood, in the eastern part of the township.

Diptheria is subsiding.

Mr. Gall has settled his little difficulty with Mr. Gould, of Norwood, by paying that gentleman twelve dollars and a half, exclusive of keeping the horse a few days.

The plastering of the new church is progressing finely under the management of Messrs. Hill & Brother, of Hastings. It is to be remarkably well done, if we can judge by the portion completed, as the basement shows finesse of finish and skilled workmanship not often excelled.

Keene is to have bread—plain and fancy, white and brown, cakes, buns, &c., every Tuesday and Friday, delivered by Mr. W. Murray, of Hastings, who brings round the staff of life to our doors without much extra charge, his bread being eleven cents per four-pound loaf.

He was the king o' a' the core—
To guard, or draw, or wick a bore,
Or up the rink like John roar
In time o' need;
But now he lags on Death's hag-score—
Tam Samson's dead.

Thus sang Burns in "Tam Samson' Elegy," and thus apropos, Keene has a Curling Club, organized and active in the roaring fray. The rink on the river is all the heart could desire—solid, smooth and extensive; but, yet, like all things terrestrial, it is uncertain. The weather! oh, the weather! There is strong talk about building a curling rink, by extending the Agricultural Shed (best known as the Drill Shed), making it eighty feet longer. The ground belongs to the township, the building to the Agricultural Society, and we do not doubt that arrangements could be made with both, as "help one another" is our motto here. It would make a splendid curling rink, a splendid skating rink, and a splendid place for the annual display of the fruits and richness of our land.

"As iron sharpeneth iron," so doth the countenance of a man and his society brighten the face of his friend. The "Keene Club" is a recognized institution. The formalities of incorporation have not been attended to as yet, but that is a mere trifle; the Club is a fact—an aggressive FACT. It intrudes its identity upon our notice in many ways—it preserves its characteristics intact. It gives zest to our politicians, brightens their arguments, and augments their intelligence by ventilating the opinions of all. It adds to the enjoyment of literary minds by giving free scope to criticism upon all subjects. It gives liberty of expression to scholarly and unscholarly minds, common sense being generally and equally distributed; and topics of local, provincial and national importance are fully discussed with unerring intelligence and great facility of expression. We always thought we would like to be a member of a club, and now our ambition may be gratified in a most pleasing manner. To the city man, the club is a necessity. Why not to the quiet villager? Who shall say that the intellect of the latter is not as receptive as that of his more polished contemporary? Often the village club excels its town or city rival in freshness of thoughts, originality of expression, and general sprightliness of humor. The city man's thoughts are often a rehash of all the experience and unlimited news-reading that his mind has taken in during the day. Our village friend has not these wherewithals to fill his mind; he is dependent more upon the resources of his own mentality, and the consequence is, he is richer in original ideas; his deductions are from pure reasoning, and not from impressions taken from other men's written or spoken thoughts; therefore, he is in our opinion better worth listening to—always keeping in mind that he is more or less instructed in the world's intelligence, from the authority of the great standard journals, daily, weekly or monthly, as they may be. Of course, this is our opinion—many may differ from it—monotony of thought is unbearable—a healthy variety of opinion is always necessary to good government and good clubs. Therefore, we say, "Success to the Keene Club." Long may it exist in harmony of purpose and pleasant union of mind, though widely dissevered in physical needs and resources.

NORTH MONAGHAN.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

North Monaghan has a model collector of taxes. That official, Mr. Thos. Armstrong, has returned his roll to the council with every cent collected. This speaks loudly not only for Mr. Armstrong's energy and persuasiveness, but also for the solvency of the ratepayers of the township. Other tax collectors would like to know how he has "dun" it.

A ball will be held in the Town Hall, here, on Friday evening, 13th instant. Supper will be provided at the Hotel.

A number of small articles have recently been missed by some of our villagers. Where, oh, where have they gone?

On Friday evening last a school teacher, hailing from some village near Warsaw, paid a visit to our village, probably to attend a "convention." We would advise this young man to attend one at a time in future.

How to get Strong.

Dumb-bells and horizontal bars, Indian clubs and the trapeze are valuable under certain conditions, but they are detrimental rather than beneficial if the blood is poor and thin and poisoned with bile. Use of the muscles necessitates waste as well as induces growth. If the blood does not carry sufficient nutritive material to repair the waste, loss of strength necessarily follows, and growth is out of the question. Purify and enrich your blood with Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" and then exercise will develop and not consume your physique.

THE WARDEN HONORED.

On Tuesday evening, the 3rd inst., a supper was given by a number of citizens to our Reeve and Warden, Mr. B. C. Strickland. Mr Purser prepared the spread, and did it well. The hall was beautifully decorated with evergreens. City Band was in attendance, contributing much to the enjoyment of the evening. Sixty sat down to supper. Mr. John Dinwoodie occupied the chair; on his right was the Warden, and on his left Mr. Belcher. Mr. H. LeFevre occupied the vice-chair. After the usual loyal toasts, "The Army, Navy, and Volunteers" was responded to by Messrs. H. LeFevre, F. Barlee, and T. Muchall, respectively. "Canada our Home" was heartily received and warmly responded to by Mr. Geo. Strickland. "The Learned Professions" was replied to by Rev. Messrs. Johnson and Farncomb, Drs. Bell and Caldwell, and Mr. Belcher, of Peterboro. Mr. Strickland, in replying to the toast, "Our Guest, the Warden," returned thanks for the hearty manner in which the toast had been drunk, referred to several matters of interest,—the hospital bestowed as a gift to the town, the Trent Valley Canal, and also to the responsibilities of the office, which he found greater than he expected. He had the honor of being the youngest man that had filled the Warden's chair. "The Village Industries" was responded to by Messrs. J. B. Chapin and Wm. Cox. Messrs. Tanner and W. J. Wallace spoke for the "Mercantile Interests," while Messrs. Morrison, C. F. Calland, P. W. Strickland, and W. D. E. Strickland replied to the toast of "The Ladies," who were heartily honored. Mr. Purser replied for "The Host and Hostess," which was followed by "God Save the Queen." Altogether, a most pleasant evening was spent, and many compliments paid to our guest.

Graham, John Richardson, and others, asking the Council to purchase the Bible Christian church for village purposes, that a By-law be submitted to the freeholders on a deposit of $30 00 being made with the village treasurer, said sum to be returned if the by-law carries. A motion was passed ordering the Clerk to send to F. Clark, Toronto, and procure one dozen hand grenades, price $8 00. ZION.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Prof. Crow and family, the talented Indian musician, of Alderville, gave an entertainment in the Grange Hall on the night of the 5th inst. The Professor and family were engaged by the Rescue Temple of I. O. G. T., of this neighborhood, and the engagement proved successful beyond all expectations. Receipts of the evening nearly $30. The entertainment was full of sparkle, and had a crispness about it that made it altogether unique. Some excellent songs were well sung, and the comicalities were mirth-provoking to a degree alarmingly portentious to suspender buttons, tight corsets, and dude pants. Not the least part of the performance was the reciting by Master Sidney Smithson. When the entertainment was over the youth and beauty of the Zion neighborhood congregated at the residence of Mr. Smithson, where the family hospitalities were dished up in a manner which thoroughly satisfied the most fastidious. After revelling in the "voluptuous swells" (which the Prof. and family abundantly supplied), and other amusements till an early hour,

At a meeting of Fenians held in Chicago on Sunday one of the speakers announced that the object of the organization was to blow up the whole of London with dynamite. It is also stated that a number of dynamite chiefs have been in session in that city during the past few days, and that it is intended to inaugurate a new crusade against England on the occasion of the Emmet celebration on the 4th prox.

FALL OF KHARTOUM.

THE MAHDI IN POSSESSION.

General Gordon Said to Have Been Killed.

The City Secured by Treachery—Colonel Wilson Arrives Two Days too Late—Great Excitement in London—Officers Offering Their Services for a Rescue Expedition—Fears for Stewarts Forces—The Government Greatly Disturbed.

London, Feruary 5th—To-day the excitement recently prevailing here reached its climax when the startling news was received from Lord Wolsely of the fall of Khartoum, General Gordon betrayed and captured, and Wilson's relief forces wrecked and wanting relief themselves. It was a rude awakening at the War Office this morning when the sub-official received the despatches and learned the news. Telegrams were at once sent to the members of the Cabinet.

The news, as received, was from Lord Wolsely at Korti, to the effect that an Arab courier from Metemma had arrived at his headquarters with the information that Colonel Wilson had returned from Khartoum to which place he had been despatched with a small force on the steamer found at Metemma upon its capture and reported that Khartoum had been captured, and that General Gordon had been made a prisoner of war. Colonel Wilson said that all along his retreat down the river he was constantly harassed and subjected to a heavy fire. Many of the shots struck the steamer, but without doing serious damage. Everything went comparatively well until within a short distance of Metemma, when his vessel ran ashore on one of the many islands and was totally wrecked.

Colonel Wilson stated that Khartoum fell on the 26th ult., and he arrived off the city two days after its fall. He expresses the belief that the capture of the city was brought about by treachery of some of the natives that General Gordon had pressed into his service. Colonel Wilson with his little force at last accounts was still on the island on which he was wrecked, awaiting a steamer to take them to Metemma.

The courier reports, added Gen. Wolseley, that the fall of Khartoum had caused a feeling of gloom throughout Gen. Stewart's camp, and that fears were freely expressed that unless reinforcements soon arrived their fate would in all probability be soon sealed. A correspondent, on receipt of the first information, drove to the War Office, when he was told:—"You may say what you now fear is that the Mahdi is advancing by the southern or Bahuida route, avoiding our troops, who are advancing by the Metemma route, no doubt with the attention of striking at our Korti base. No doubt Wolseley has recalled General Earle, to make a strong defence at his present headquarters. We think—but the news is meagre—that General Gordon sent his few trusty men in the two steamers that met General Wilson, thereby leaving himself in the hands of the treacherous remainder of Egyptians and natives. Unfortunately reinforcements cannot be sent on account of the season of the year and the impossibility of knowing what precise point to send." Mr. Gladst. on learning of General Wolseley's despatch, proceeded at once to his official residence in Downing street and immediately issued a summons to the members of his Cabinet requesting their presence at once. The removal of all doubt that the Mahdi holds possession of the town, raised the excitment in London, and everywhere throughout the British Isles, to fever heat. Not since the passage of the Dardanelles by the British fleet, during the Turco-Russian war, was there such wild excitement in the city. On every street corner groups of excited people discussed and speculated as to the result of this new disaster in Egypt.

TREACHERY.

Rumors concerning fate of Gordon are many, but all agree that the Mahdi captured Khartoum by treachery. The most reliable reports say: Faras Pasha, being left in charge of the ramparts, opened the gates on Jan. 26th, and admitted the enemy. Some rumors state that the Mahdi with a few Levantines is cooped up in a church. Others say Gordon has been seen wearing the Mahdi's uniform. The majority agree, however, that Gordon has been killed. Wilson had three steamers, two of which were wrecked in the Nile between Khartoum and Metemma. The third, bearing Col. Wortley and party, brought the news to the British camp near Metemma.

The London War Office is besiged with an army of officers tendering their services for active duty in the Soudan. Numerous telegrams are being received from officers throughout the country, asking for assignment to a rescue expedition, should it be concluded to take such action.

Orders have been despathed to Woolwich Dockyard to immediately prepare to send a month's rations and eight thousand men for the Khartoum expedition. It is stated this evening that Commander Cameron, the African traveller, has offered to start at once for the Soudan to assist the British against the rebels. Orders have been sent to Portsmouth Haven to begin fitting out the troops immediately.

The War office Friday evening decided to advise the Government to despatch 3,000 troops to Suakim immediately. General Stephenson telegraphs that five thousand men will be needed to clear the road to Berber, as the news of the fall of Khartoum will induce the central tribes to join Osman Digma. Stephenson also advises that the present strength of the troops in Upper and Lower Egypt be maintained, and that reinforcements be drawn from England and India. Wolseley has renewed his demand for an expedition to Suakim to consist of 3,000 men under Gen. Greaves.

WOLSELLY GIVEN CARTE BLANCHE.

It is understood that the Cabinet Council on Friday decided to give Gen. Wolseley carte blanche to take any measures he deems necessary for the rescue of Gen. Gordon if alive, and to make use of such military operations as he considers advisable to regain the ground lost in the Soudan by the fall of Khartoum. Among the alternatives suggested to Gen. Wolseley are the immediate recapture of Khartoum, and the employment, if necessary, of Indian troops to reopen the Berber route.

ITALY AND THE SOUDAN.

ROME, Feb. 6.—The fall of Khartoum has produced a profound impression here. The newspapers unite in expressions of sympathy with Gen. Gordon, and give utterance to the belief that the Mahdi's victory will draw England and Italy into yet closer relations with a view to joint action in Egypt.

CANADIAN VOLUNTEERS FOR EGYPT.

The cable reports that the offer of Col. Williams (of Port Hope) to raise a Canadian regiment for service in the Soudan has been accepted in a way. The Colonel is to raise 800 men, but instead of being sent to the scene of war, they are to be placed on garrison duty in England, relieving the regular troops who are being drafted to Egypt. It is quite evident, that the War Office means to pay a compliment to our loyalty, and under the circumstances Col. Williams is bound to obey orders, though it must be confessed that doing sentry-go, in an English barracks will not afford his men many brilliant opportunities of distinguishing themselves.

THE CONDUCT OF THE CAMPAIGN.

Lord Wolseley has received carte blanche from the Government. Eight thousand men are to be despatched to him at once, bringing his army up to 16,000, exclusive of the casualties in recent engagements. This force, supplied as it will be with a siege train, ought to be strong enough to capture Khartoum, and bear down all other opposition. It must be remembered, however, that the best season is at hand, a more formidable foe than the Mahdi. According to this morning's despatches, Wolseley, deeming it impossible to keep the field during the torrid summer, which begins about March 15, purposes moving upon Berber and resting there until the rise of the Nile, with the return of cooler weather in September, permits him to advance with his combined forces upon Khartoum. The campaign may thus be prolonged for a year. It took France twenty years, and cost her 150,000 men, to bring the Arabs of Algeria into subjection; and though the Mahdi's strength is hardly to be compared with that of Abd-el-Kadir, the task which the British Government has on hand is beyond question a stupendous one.

A LONG SUSPENSE.

The expedition was postponed originally until the warm weather had passed but the object of the campaign cannot have been accomplished before it has returned. It will be well on in March before Wolseley can reach Khartoum, however lucky he may be—and then? Gordon may be rescued. The uncertainty in regard to his fate is painful, and yet the glimmer of hope that lingers modifies the wrath which the news of Khartoum's fall provokes. The recapture of the beleaguered city cannot now close the war. Nothing short of the subjugation of the Soudan, at least of the subjugation of the rebel tribes, can warrant a withdrawal of the troops, and before that mission is carried out midsummer pestilence may have carried away many who escaped the misfortunes of battle.

ITALY AN AN ALLY.

Should the Italian Government lend a hand—and it appears to have made up its mind to do so—the work of conquering the Soudanese will be performed with some expedition; but the difficulty that France encountered was not in conquering the tribes but in keeping them conquered. Italy is mixed up in this war through her interests at Assab, a port on the Red sea opposite Aden. She has had a settlement there for some time, and three Italian merchants having been murdered by natives, is now about to avenge them. One expedition has already reached Assab and a second is to follow. Turkey has protested against this interference with her suzerain rights in Egypt, but the views of the "Sick Man," even in matters affecting the integrity of his own empire, are no longer deemed of consequence.

DEATH OF GORDON CONFIRMED.

LONDON, Feb. 11.—The Daily News appears in mourning out of respect for General Gordon, and publishes the following from Gakdul:—"The natives who escaped from Khartoum say Gen. Gordon was killed while leaving his house to rally the faithful troops. The latter were cut down to a man, and for hours the town was the scene of a merciless slaughter, not even women and children being spared. All the notables were killed except the treacherous pashas and their followers."

DETAILS OF GORDON'S MURDER.

The following details of the killing of Gen. Gordon and the fall of Khartoum have been received:—On the day of the capture, which is variously stated as the 26th and 27th of January, General Gordon's attention was attracted by a tremendous tumult in the streets. He left the so-called palace or Goverment building, in which he had made his headquarters, to ascertain the cause. As he reached the street he was stabbed in the back and fell dead. The tumult was caused by the Mahdi's troops, who had gained access to the interior of the town through treachery, and who were soon in complete possession of the place, including the citadel. A fearful massacre of the garrison followed.

SCENES OF SLAUGHTER.

are described as surpassing the Burgharian atrocities and rivalling the worst horrors of the Sepoy mutiny. The panic stricken Egyptians were captured in their flight and put to death with the most fiendish tortures. Some were transfixed with spears and left to bleed to death. Most of the victims were mutilated in a horrible manner. Their eyes were gonged out, their noses were slit, their tongues torn out by the roots. In many cases the mutilated parts of the victims' bodies were thrust into their mouth while they were still living. The massacre included many non-combatants. The Egyptian women were subjected to shameful indignities. More than a hundred women and young girls were given over to the Mahdi's followers to be used as slaves. After the slaughter many Arabs were seen rushing about the streets with the heads of the Egyptians impaled upon spears. The next night was spent in a saturnalia of blood and debauchery. The Mahdi has repaired the fortifications and made Khartoum well nigh impregnable. He has made it his permanent headquarters, and is said to have abundance of guns and ammunition.

A SERMON

Preached in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, by Rev. Henry Ward Beecher.

Mark iii., 31-35:—"There came then His brethren and His mother, and, standing without, sent unto Him, calling Him. And the multitude sat about Him, and they said unto Him, Behold Thy mother and Thy brethren without seek for Thee; and He answered them, saying, Who is my mother, or my brethren? And He looked around about on them which sat about Him, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren. For whosoever do the will of God, the same is my brother, and my sister and mother."

Christ's treatment of His mother, he said, is in utter variance with the legendary notion, and even with modern ideals of the Virgin Mary. You will bear in mind that the mother of Jesus is mentioned but a very few times in the history contained in the Gospel, and never in any such way as to fulfil the impressions which we now have of her; for as she exists in art and in our common apprehensions, she is a creature of the imagination, and bears probably no whit of resemblance to what she actually was when, as a peasant in Galilee, she brought up her peasant Son. The Virgin Mary of the Roman Catholic Church and the virgin of the mediæval and modern art are very beautiful, very noble, not to be put away because they are not historically true. There are a thousand things that are imaginary that are of more importance than the things that are facts.

The mother-heart of the race was not found in the Roman conception of God, but men needed it and sought for it, some by way of self-crucifixion, some by way of incidental idolatries, some (and happy were they) by lifting the Virgin up out of her humble station and function and giving to her all that God had been cheated of by Latin theology. The tenderness, what we might call the right motherhood of divine nature, out of which all human mothers sprang, as sparks spring from the brand—that men sought to infuse into the system of theology by giving it as the function of the Virgin Mary. I do not envy any one that, with a kind of harsh Puritan rigor, defile and cast out of the temple of our imagination and of worship the Virgin Mary, simply because she is not historically true, for it was the resource of struggling human nature to help itself up to a God that was so stern and so rigorous for justice that no man conscious of his own infirmities and sins would dare look upon Him. She was the veil of the soul through which it could afford to look upon the Son, her Son, our Saviour, and through Him as through a double veil upon God, who had been depicted as such a terrific God of justice and truth that no man conscious of imperfection would dare to stand in His presence for a moment. Tenderness was indispensable somewhere, and having it was not irreverence of the text; it was not a mere disposition to carry forward human notions that led to the creation of the Virgin; it was the same impulse that led men to begin to worship her, namely, they must have something connected with God that had tenderness in it and love, and since it was in her and excluded by the theology that they heard from God Himself, except through somebody else, the inevitable movement of the mind would be left and carry on and up the Virgin until she should stand in the imagination of worshippers as only next. But when once the theme had taken hold of the human heart it fully possessed it, and from the early days until this, poet and artist and theologian have poured forth the deepest feelings of the human heart toward divine tenderness, which they called Mary.

The worship of the Virgin was at once, then, the most natural and necessary of all the developments in theology. Nor can we afford to lose it now that we behold the true God, clothed with all the attributes of exalted motherhood. It is a poem. Shall we throw away Homer's "Iliad" and "Odyssey" because they were historically so largely made up of fiction? Shall we throw away "Paradise Lost" or "Regained," or any of the other matchless writings of Milton? Shall we destroy the dramas or the comedies or historical plays of Shakspeare, because in a sense they were fictitious?' In a larger sense they were real. They were made up of the very elements of human nature, and although no one may even have have lived exactly as some of the characters, they represent the average of life and the reality of life more than any one man could do it.

And shall we destroy this most exquisite picture that has been by the hearts of ages touched little by little until it has come to be the very glory of the high thought of woman and motherhood, simply because factually it never existed? That would be wantonness, indeed. It hangs in the air like a cloud upon which the sun sheds its most beautiful light. It drives out of the gaudy old pagan sylph and [illegible] profane, and [illegible] star.

Now turn back to Christ's recorded relations to His mother. His treatment of the woman Mary was not vulgar nor rude, but in every instance as one that was superior to one that was inferior. In His coursedown life He stood upon a spiritual plane and He beheld her moiling and toiling on an inferior stratum.

Let us look a little into this, then. In the record which is given of this in Mark, third chapter, 35th verse, we find this statement: "And the multitude cometh together again so that they could not so much as eat bread. And when His friends (as it is in our version, kinsmen in the margin, very properly, when His kinsmen) heard of it they went out to lay hold on Him, for they said He is beside Himself." There is the mother and there are the brethren charging their Son with the insanity of enthusiasm. In other words they said to Him: "That is trickery. When you are down here in Galilee you can work marvels and miracles, with nobody to find you out, but go up to Judea, where there are very shrewd and educated men, and do them there if you want to have the name of being a prophet." And so when on one occasion He was performing public service and preaching, they interrupted it; they came on to the border of the assembly and sent in word that they wanted to see Him. They wanted Him to come out where they might take charge of Him; they wanted to call Him off from His secret mission. We may suppose that there is some spark of tenderness there, but what a total ignorance of all that belonged to His nobility and to His mission among men! How abject was the sphere in which they were living, and from which they judged Him, and how beautiful and glorious was that sphere in which He was living, and when, under those circumstances, they addressed Him and undertook to restrict His ministry and to take Him away, I think it was a very mild reply that He gave to them. And this brings us to the subject matter of this passage.

This answer of the Saviour reveals more clearly than perhaps anywhere else what fell out incidentally and partially on time and another all the way through his ministry, namely, the double nature of man—the under man and the upper man, which Paul in the spirit of philosophy, nowhere more, perhaps, than in the seventh of Romans, works after a manner that would have delighted Darwin's heart—the animal man and the spiritual man and engrafted the spiritual man and the quarrels they have between themselves in human life. But Christ continually spoke as if there was a double vision and a double life in men, the higher and the lower one; and He announced that the relationship which existed between body and body, the secular man—that his relationship was not abrogated, but that it was simply the antecedent of another and the higher one, and that the other and higher relationship of the soul was as much above this lower one as the bright blossoming cluster on the vine is above the rude and earth clad root itself. Both exist, the one nascent and lowest, the other developed and highest.

This relationship of the body and of the lower life He declares elsewhere not to have anything to do with God's kingdom, the kingdom of the soul. The phrase that you so often meet in the New Testament, the kingdom of God and the kingdom of soul, as defined in Scripture, it is as being within you—your nature. Your under nature is the kingdom of this world, but your upper nature is the kingdom of God.

Now, in reply to His mother's call, He flashes forth this higher relationship, which included her in a measure, but included others also, namely, the relationship by the soul. It was the new idea of the family. We are related to one another, father and child, brothers and sisters, related by blood as John says, and it is considered a great thing to have great relations. It is a great thing for the people themselves. They boast upon it. Why, if a man praising up his life should find out that, about 2,000 years ago, or 1,500 or 1,000, his ancestor was an Irish king. "I know I came from something that was high and noble; I like that—I like that!" If it could be found out that there was in the 30th degree of cousinship, living anywhere, a connexion of Shakespeare, the one-millionth part of a drop of blood would be enough to make her an object of observation and admiration. "Why, she is related to Shakespeare—Shakespeare run out." And men not only came over here that are the under-sons of noble families, but their hostlers came over also, that took care of the horses of the under-sons of the nobility, any one that has been across the back-yard or has driven a spade into it even, or has been in any way connected with them—kicked out of their houses even—relationship is a great thing in this world, a very great thing. And yet how often is it that under the same roof there are those as far apart as the cross on the steeple is from the lowest foundation-stone under ground. But if there is this other relationship, that we are born not of blood nor of the will of man, but of God, the highest relationship is in that element in us which is of God, and which alone brings us into communication with God.

How many men there are standing in affiliation with women who cannot see them nor know them. How many wretched men there are standing with peerless women to whom they look up, but they see not higher than the lip, and all that is sublime in purity and aspiration and nobility and self-sacrifice is out of their sight. Talk about divorce. Many married persons live in an eternal divorce all their life long. And many there are living in the laws, within the circuit of a common household, that are as wide apart as if one lived in China and the other in North America. They don't think alike, they don't feel alike, they have not the same needs, nor ambitions, nor do they seek them by like means. One is eternally groping on the soil where the worm lives; the other wings his life eternally in the sky where the birds and the eagles are. They are not related.

The "household of faith" is now a phrase, not of courtesy or of poetry either, but it is an interpreting phrase as to the divine idea of the church. Now, what do we find in churches but sumptuous buildings? All the apparatus that pleases the taste and lower imagination; men gathered in by the eloquence of the speaker or by the beauty of the music, or by the custom or fashion; sitting together as far apart as the heavens is from the earth, all coming to the same [illegible] and partaking [illegible] bread and at the same [illegible] wine, and [illegible] thousandfold and sisters to [illegible] Christ: envying, jealous, quarrelsome, glad to get hold of an evil story, propagating it, running to and fro as if they were rather assassins of each other's characters.

I am nearer to Fenelon of the Roman Catholic church than I could ever be to John Calvin. We only touch each other, Calvin and I, as fire touches powder. And there may be many and many that I behold round about me in creeds that I do not believe a word of, whose shoelatchets I am not worthy to unloose, and they are far nearer to me than many who should be nearer. But there rises up by the power of the eternal God this perpetual, undying tendency to affiliate, by reason, by imagination, by love, by obedience and reverence to God, by our higher elements, to come together in affectionate relationship.

As one goes through the civilised world, here shines out a light, and there a light. Now, it is in Calvinism, now it is in Romanism (if I may be permitted to use a word that has stumbled and broken the neck of men.) It matters not what church it is. I love many a Catholic priest. I take lessons of many, too. The literature that they have given has been the very manna in the desert of life to me, and I look abroad among them to see such examples of piety and sweet serenity and gentleness, while others, faithful outwardly to their own church, are God's almoners of a better life to me and to mine, and I hail them as my brothers. They might not understand it if I should go with effusion and enthusiasm and clasp their hand; but in my soul I clasp their hand and say "brother," to many and many a one who lives far away, and never will see me or know me.—I am privileged to say "sister" and "mother" to many that are not far from the throne of God itself. And when I walk alone, I walk with the multitude. In the days of solitude, and in the days of discouragement, I rise to the communion of saints; for to me that word is full of meaning, one of richness, and it is a word for you as well as for me, no matter how low you are. If I had a son that wandered away from my house, and came back a tattered vagabond, would not my love re-adopt him? and would I not give all the world to lift him? And is not any man that is being lifted or seeking to be lifted by beginning to evolve that relationship?

Everywhere throughout the world are men poor, poor, uncomplaining, unnoticed among the great; but the great men in this world are in God's eye not half as much as they are in their own; and the humble in in this world are perpetually in the sight of God, and every throb, if I might venture to say, of God's heart, is toward the meek and lowly.

Brethren we are travelling to that other land. Have you got your pass? Have you got your ticket? That is not what the church can give you—any of you. Have you that certainty of Jesus Christ within your soul which couples you with all that is high, pure, noble, generous, selfsacrificing? Does your life revolve in this channel? Do you love those things more and more? No matter what befalls you here, do not be discouraged, you are not far from home. How swift roll the wheels of time! How short are now the days, and how quick are the movements of years! One summer you shall see to the end, but the summer is past and gone like a flower, like the golden dandelion that shines this morning in its beauty and to-morrow morning has ruffled itself into a globe, exquisite, and to-morrow it is gone, and the place thereof shall know it no more. We are running fast, rising I hope fast. It is not long before we shall hear the summons—"Child, come home." Do you know the way home? Do you know your father is in heaven? Do you know your brothers, your sisters, that wait for you there? Do you know that great family of faith? Are you joined to them by longings and desires here in life? Hold on, then; be patient, wait. Only a little while, only a few more days to many of us; only a few months to others; only a few years to most of us. Another man shall stand in my place; may God make him a better man! Others shall fill these seats; may God make them better Christians than you are or have been! Only a short time and we shall be gone, and others shall take our places. Are you ready to go? And shall you have your place high up near the throne? or shall you say with the psalmist of old: "I had rather be a door-keeper than not to be in heaven." May God give you all grace to live that higher life, that sweeter and more blessed relationship, that shall join you to Christ, and through Him to God, and to all those that are blessed, with all in that rest which remaineth for the people of God.

Catarrh—A New Treatment.

Perhaps the most extraordinary success that has been achieved in modern medicine has been attained by the Dixon treatment for Catarrh. Out of 2,000 patients treated during the past six months, fully ninety per cent. have been cured of this stubborn malady. This is none the less startling when it is remembered that not five per cent. of patients presenting themselves to the regular practitioner are benefitted, while the patent medicines and other advertised cures never record a cure at all. Starting with the claim now generally believed by the most scientific men that the disease is due to the presence of living parasites in the tissue, Mr. Dixon at once adapted his cure to their extermination—this accomplished, he claims the Catarrh is practically cured, and the permanency is unquestioned, as cures effected by him four years ago are cures still. No one else has ever attempted to cure Catarrh in this manner, and no other treatment has ever cured Catarrh. The application of the remedy is simple, and can be done at home, and the present season of the year is the most favourable for a speedy and permanent cure, the majority of cases being cured at one treatment. Sufferers should correspond with Messrs. A. H. DIXON & SON, 305 King street west, Toronto, Canada, and enclose stamp for their treatise on Catarrh.—Montreal Star, Nov. 17, 1883. 48-52t

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all throat and Lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this receipt, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. Noyes, 149 Power's Block, Rochester, N. Y. 45-26-eow.

The Deception of the Microscope.

A hundred [illegible] of [illegible] were passing [illegible] crowded the hall. Many visitors looked through them with great curiosity. Under one of the glasses was a beautiful gold fly that looked like a mountain of shining gold. A passage stamp under another lense was as large as the State of Texas. A drop of ink looked like the Black Sea. Three or four grains of sand beneath a large microscope were a Sahara. What seemed the Chicago conflagration was a firefly. A fly-track magnified one million diameters resembled the crater of a volcano. A Jersey mosquito's bill looked like the mast of a ship. A vast ocean with whales, sea serpents and porpoises floating and gambling in it was a drop of water from an old rain barrel. Some gin fizz in a thimble looked like the great geyser in the National park.

"What is this herd of wild buffalo?" asked an old lady, adjusting her spectacles and taking her eye from the microscope.

"Those are not buffalo, madam," said a scientist. "They are insects too small to be seen with the naked eye."

"What is this that looks like the Atlantic cable?" asked a young lady.

"A hair from a young man's mustache," said a microscopist.

"Look at Jumbo!" exclaimed a little girl, as she held her up to look into the microscope at a young flea.

"It's the same elephant I saw at Barnum's show," said the little boy, greatly delighted.

"What a beautiful lake!" said two young ladies who had just looked through a microscope. They glanced at the card which labeled the object under the glass. It read: "A gnat's toe-nail."—New York Morning Journal.

Villard's Rise and Fall.

One of the most remarkable personal movements of the present day is Henry Villard's resumption of a residence in his native land. It is now said that he will make Berlin his future home, and it is probable that he will (to a partial degree at least) enter the Government service. His knowledge of American affairs would render him of the highest use to Bismarck, while he could add to this a lucrative banking business—having the confidence of both continents. This prospective change shows how easily the best calculations yield to circumstances. A year ago Villard was at the head of one of the grandest of American enterprises, and felt so assured of success that he gave that splendid excursion which must long stand unrivalled. He was then estimated at five millions, and was building a house whose cost was figured at a half million. His name was daily paragraphed and went the rounds of the press with all the applause due to one who had conquered the greatest obstacles and given success to an enterprise which, in the hands of Jay Cooke, had proved so great a failure. How rapidly this brilliant display was followed by misfortune! Thence came the sad news of a general collapse, and Henry Villard soon sank beyond hope of recovery. His was the first of that remarkable series of failures which has given such fearful distinction to the present season.—N. Y. Letter to the Troy Times.

Could Not Treat Him that Way.

Col. Percy Yerger and his son Tom came home rather late a few nights ago in an intoxicated condition. Mrs. Yerger had been waiting to open the door, but had fallen asleep, hence there was considerable delay in opening the door, at which Tom, who has been educated at a northern college, remarked to his parent:

"Look here, old man, if I was married to that woman I'd teach her not to keep me waiting this way."—Texas Siftings.

There are now about a dozen bridges across the Thames at London, and the corporation has just decided to build another. Two centuries ago London bridge was the only one, and the bold proposition to throw across another as far up as Putney was kicked out of the House of Commons. One statesman went so far as to urge that the second bridge would be an end of London's prosperity.

The plan of using the enormous water power of the Alps for working electric railways in Switzerland is about to take a definite shape, the idea being to connect the towns of St. Moritz and Pontresina by an electric railway four and three-quarters miles long the motive power to be supplied by the mountain streams; the line, in case the plan proves a success, to be extended a considerable distance.

To free canaries and other cage birds from the insects which infest them, the following method is recommended by one who has successfully practiced it for years: Every night just at dusk the cage or aviary is covered with a white cloth. During the night parasites will crawl from off the birds on to the cloth, where they may be seen running about when the cloth is removed at daybreak. The insects may be killed by putting the cloth into boiling water. A repetition of the process will soon clear away the pests without injuring the birds. Insect powders will no doubt kill the parasites, but the birds as well.

Among the Chinese the tortoise and the snake have been chosen emblems of martial security against attack for 3,000 years. It would appear also that the Chinese belief that a great affection exists between these two classes of creatures has some foundation in fact. A correspondent of the China Mail writes that one evening as he was walking on the bank of a river in Shansi he saw a tortoise swimming across the current. He fired at the tortoise, upon which it dived under the water, and a snake, cut in two by the bullet, floated on the surface. The snake seems to have been using the tortoise's back for a ferry boat.

Cazas y Ochoa died like a hero. He was a Spaniard in the government civil service. At the time of the collision of the steamers Gijon and Laxham, a few weeks ago, he was a passenger on the former. In the midst of the panic he remained leaning over the rail of the fated steamer. He declined to enter the small boat because he thought another person would endanger the safety of all. The vessel had settled low in the water by this time and was swaying to and fro violently. The persons in the small boat shouted good-by. He lit a cigarette, adjusted his gold-bowed eye-glasses and then waved his hand. A second later the steamer reared and then dived straight down into the sea.—Philadelphia Times.

A MARVELLOUS STORY

TOLD IN TWO LETTERS.

FROM THE SON: "29 Cedar St., New York, Oct. 25, 1882.

"Gentlemen: My father resides at Clover, Vt. He has been a great sufferer from Scrofula, and the inclosed letter will tell you what a marvelous effect has had in his case. I think his blood must have contained the humor for at least ten years; but it did not show, except in the form of a scrofulous sore on the wrist, until about six years ago. From a few spots which appeared at that time, it gradually spread so as to cover his entire body. I assure you he was terribly afflicted, and an object of pity, when he began using your medicine. Now, there is no man of his age who enjoys as good health as he. I could easily name many persons who would testify to the facts in this case.

Yours truly, W. M. PHILLIPS."

FROM THE FATHER: "It is both a pleasure and a duty for me to state to you the benefit I have derived from the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Six months ago I was completely covered with a terrible humor and scrofulous sores. The humor caused an insufferable and intolerable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the SARSAPARILLA in April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 72 years of age. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them, as I have here tried to tell you, AYER'S SARSAPARILLA. Clover, Vt., Oct. 31, 1882. Yours gratefully,

HIRAM PHILLIPS."

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA cures Scrofula and all Scrofulous Complaints, Erysipelas, Eczema, Ringworm, Blotches, Sores, Boils, Tumors, and Eruptions of the Skin. It clears the blood of all impurities, aids digestion, stimulates the action of the bowels, and thus restores vitality and strengthens the whole system.

SCEPTICISM AND INFIDELITY

A Successful Series of Lectures.

Dr. Sexton Unfolds the "Folly of Atheism."

The lecture given on the above subject on behalf of the Y.M.C.A., by the celebrated Dr. Sexton, in the George Street Methodist Church, on Monday evening, was well attended, there being a large number of our foremost citizens among the audience.

John Carnegie, Esq., M.P.P., occupied the chair, and Rev. Messrs. Tovell, Munro and Bell occupied seats on the platform. After singing a hymn, and prayer by Rev. Mr. Bell, the lecture began, the speaker introducing his subject by quoting the Psalmist's declaration, "The fool has said in his heart there is no God." It was noted that scepticism took a negative ground. Modern atheism is an assertion that there are no evidences of a God. Agnosticism is a form of knownothingism, so that it comes to this, that the belief in a God is attacked from the standpoint of ignorance. Theology is a science, worked out on the same principles as other sciences. The truths of ordinary sciences are incapable of explanation by ordinary minds, yet they are believed on the evidence of greater minds. The inductive method of reasoning collects all the facts and adapts the theory in harmony with them. This is done in every other science, and theology is worked out by showing that a Divine cause is in harmony with the facts of the universe.

Man knows that he exists, and has a personality that is permanent and is surrounded by others similarly constituted. Man is not a mere bundle of sensations, for all are conscious of something higher and greater lying behind. It is self-evident that something is eternal—that existed from all eternity, and that something must be indefinitely extended. This eternal existence is not man, neither is it material existence, as the atheist's say, for the material is conditional and limited, and cannot be eternal. Nature consists of phenomena, which must have a beginning and an end. Every part of the universe is an effect; there must be a cause. Stuart Mill says there is a permanent part of matter called force. Force is not a property of matter, but something higher that we must seek outside of matter. Modern science shows that all modes of motion are forms of force convertible one into the other, without loss, as heat is convertible into light, and vice versa. All human sensations are the result of motion, and if all motion should cease in the universe we should become blind, deaf, etc. The athiest asserts that all motion is force and that that is what they call God. If force be the one existence, one form of force must have been eternal. The highest form of force is intelligence, and the highest form must have been eternal; intelligence inheres in consciousness, and consciousness must, therefore, have been eternal, and there must have been from all eternity an eternal, intelligent, conscious personal ty, and that must have been God. (Applause.) There is no material, then, that is not an effect. There is only one power we know that is capable of effecting any change and there is no motion except as the result of will. The engine draws a train of cars, but back of this effect, beyond every other apparent cause, is the true cause, the will of the engineer. Apply this to the universe and there will be found a Divine Will behind all motion.

It is impossible to get thought out of anything into which thought has not been introduced. Nothing accidental can produce order. A font of type thrown into disorder can yield no thought; there was no thought put into it. The same type arranged to print a child's primer, yields little thought, because little thought was put into it, but used to print a philosopher's wisdom it is full of thought. The universe is full of thought, arguing that Divine Thought has been in it. The universe is built on mathematical principles, and there must have been a mathematician. If it took a Newton to discover this great fact, how much greater must the Mathematician himself have been. Wherever there is order there is purpose; where there is purpose there is thought, where there is thought there must be a thinker Human instinct points to a God. Worship is a human instinct, and religion a necessity of man's nature.

Dr. Sexton spoke for about two hours and dealt with his subject in a most masterly and logical manner, and no synopsis can give a hint of the skillful manner in which, in the course of his line of reasoning one argument dovetailed into another, all combining to form a harmonious and convincing whole. He was frequently applauded—crushing conclusion after conclusion overwhelmed the Athiest, and appealed more particularly to the sympathy of his hearers, Immortality of man made Manifest.

On Tuesday evening Dr. Sexton spoke on the above subject, in the Murray street Baptist church. Mr. Geo. A. Cox occupied the chair, and there were on the platform Rev. Messrs. Manning, Tovell and Munro.

After devotional exercises, Dr. Sexton began by asserting that belief in a God generally accompanied a belief in the immortality of the soul. Sceptics on the subject were of three kinds—those who totally denied man's immortality, those who ignored it and those who considered the subject of little importance in any way.

Those who denied entirely were materialists, and the newest so-called phase of material thought, was merely a revamping of the theories of Seneca, such as Huxley's assertion that mental operations depended on molecular changes in the brain substance. It is said that there is no future life and that there is no proof of it—that nothing can be believed that does not appeal to the senses. In that case our knowledge would be of the most narrow kind for individual human experience is comparatively of the most limited character. The speaker combatted the assertion that the reality of a future was of little consequence, for it was of the greatest possible importance, since our knowledge of the future influenced powerfully our present actions.

The phenomena of the universe were, the speaker said, divided into three tracts. Ether, where were all things without life, the second, where all things possessed life, and the third, the domain of spirit. What life is was not known, but it was a condition that holds in check the course of chemical action. Life was a form of force of a new character.

The materialists say that the brain secretes the mind as the liver secretes bile; but there was no analogy between the functions; the liver can be weighed or measured, so can its secretion, the bile; the brain can be weighed or measured, but the mind could not be so treated; it defied such treatment, and was above all material laws. In man there was something unchanging amid all the changes that surround him, and that must be the soul. Under all this change there was a force, consciousness, which eventuated in will, and if that force remains amidst all the changes we witness, it must remain after the material organization is destroyed. Mind was a unit and could not be destroyed any more than the ultimate atoms of the body. Our highest hopes and aspirations pointed to a longing for immortal life. The hope of the future life made the present tolerable. The moral nature which man possesses, indicated a natural desire to see justice done, and in real life justice was very seldom done till the end, and the future of an immortal life was the scene of meeting the universal desire of seeing justice done.

The religious nature of man presented another proof of his immortality. All nations without exception had a religious nature and a longing after a future. Even atheists clung to some form of immortality, that of race or reputation, for instance. The distinctive personality of man, the speaker asserted, could not be crushed out, his individuality would last while eternal ages endured. Dr. Sexton closed his lecture by repeating in a most effective manner, the lines, "There is no Death."

"Relation of Science to Scripture."

The third of the series of lectures was held in the George-street Methodist Church, and the increased attendance showed how highly the erudite Doctor's efforts were appreciated. Mr. A. F. Peasnette occupied the chair, and several of the resident clergymen had seats on the platform.

After devotional exercises, Dr. Sexton began by alluding to the immense strides made in every field of scientific research, and, though there were many so-called scientific men who denied the truth of the Scriptures, the most eminent were firm believers in it. The influence of the Bible had been marvellous. It had exerted its power in all ages and upon all nations and classes of people, and their characters. The attacks upon it had utterly failed to move it from its vantage ground. There must, the speaker asserted, be harmony between all truth. The Bible was true, and science was true, and there could exist no antagonism between them. But it was to be observed that there was a decided line of demarkation between science and the theories of so-called scientists and between the Bible and the varied interpretations of it. The antagonism was between men, not between the subjects. The Bible did not profess to teach science, it took higher ground and revealed matters to men that could not otherwise become known. Science unfolded the methods of the world, the Bible disclosed the cause. The influence of the Bible was unlimited, because of its universal adaptation to human requirements, showing its Divine origin. The scientific accuracy of the Bible had been impugned, but the speaker showed that there was a marvellous correspondence between the metaphors of the Bible and the facts of science. Many metaphors used had been mysteries till they were explained by the discoveries of modern science. Science was not a standard for universal truth, it was a standard for only those things which are associated with the external world. In its limited domain it could not take the place of the Bible. It was no guide to man upon the momentous subjects of a future state, the existence of God, the existence of a moral law or the relation of man to his fellows. The ground of science was continually shifting. New investigations brought new revelations. Many of its theories were only accepted in default of something better. It had been asserted that the Biblical account of creation was not in harmony with science. Scientists recognised three great divisions of nature, Inorganic, organic and psychical, which corresponded exactly to the three periods of creation. It was not to be assumed that the work of creation occupied six days of twenty-four hours each. The prevalent belief was that they indicated six indefinite periods of time, and the same belief was held by eminent believers in the Bible before geology was thought of. But the order of creation corresponded to the order of geological formation, first the substance of the world, then living things, then man. The lecturer closed his eloquent and convincing delivery by pointing out that the most eminent men in the domain of science were believers in the Bible, whose influence, while it had nothing to fear from opposition, constituted a greater moral force than the most brilliant secular literature.

A vote of thanks, proposed by Mr. D. W. Dumble and seconded by Mr. James Stratton, was enthusiastically agreed to.

Rev. Mr. Munro announced that Rev. Dr. Sexton had consented to deliver a free lecture on Friday night, in the same place, on the subject of "The Testimony of History to Christ."

There was again a large attendance. Mr. James Stratton occupied the chair, and after devotional exercises, in complimentary terms introduced the lecturer. The speaker set out by asserting that Christianity was a great fact. It had exerted the widest influence—had satisfied the brightest intellects, and rescued the lowest. In all other religious systems it was possible to separate the teacher and the system, but with Christianity this could not be done—Christ was Christianity. Christ was great because He was a divine personality and incarnation. The prophets that preceded Christ spoke in the name of the Lord, but He spoke for Himself—"I am the way, etc." There were only three theories that could be advanced in respect to Him, one that He was an impostor, and the second that He was a wild enthusiast. These were shown to be untenable, and the third remained—that He was what He professed to be. His statements had the authority of a God, and even the most brilliant sceptics had borne testimony to the vast extent of His influence. Referring to the testimony of history to Christ, the speaker drew a most graphic picture of the condition of the world at Christ's coming. Judaism was practically a dead letter, and the most terrible condition of moral corruption characterized the Jewish people. The only relic of religion was a bald and hollow attention to ceremonial observances. At that time a large proportion of the world was under Roman rule, and the utter profligacy and immorality of the times were painted in the most sombre colors. The wisest were without hope; the most common way of escape from the despair of life was suicide. Philosophy failed to supply a remedy. Such was the state of the world when Christ came, and the marvellous progress of His teachings was a proof of their divine nature. They came into collision with the splendours of a venerable theocracy. Christianity had to offer the facts of the crucifixion—the death of the slave—and therefore abhorrent to both Jew and Roman; it had to teach the resurrection, a mystery that the world could not comprehend and must pronounce preposterous. But Christianity came, Judaism ceased to be, and the Jews were scattered When the new religion came to be accepted in Rome, its opponents attempted various ways to stay its progress, the most formidable of which was the most terrible persecutions the world ever saw. Why should they persecute Christianity? The Romans were tolerant and placed the gods of conquered countries in the Pantheon at Rome. Jesus was to them a new God, why not place Him with the others? Because Christianity was apart and above all other religions and could not amalgamate with any other; hence the persecution. In less than three centuries after Christ came the Jews ceased to look for a Messiah, because the Messiah had come. The great Roman empire crumbled in pieces before the march of Christ's truth. If Christianity was not of divine origin why had it such marvellous success? The speaker referred to the five reasons given in explanation by the historian Gibbon, and showed that they could be resolved into proofs of the divine nature of Christianity. The effect of Christianity on the world at large was pointed out. Virtues came to the front with it which the world had never known before—humility and humanity. It raised woman from the place of a slave to her true position. It originated the domestic virtues and introduced the relations known by the most sacred word, home; it sanctified the marriage tie and gave a meaning to parental love and filial affection, and first taught that these were reciprocal duties. It first recognized the dignity of labor—for the word of truth came forth from the carpenter's shop at Nazareth It had given origin, in a measure, to education. Of all the splendid universities of Europe, Christians had built every one, and in the dark ages the clergy alone kept the lamp of knowledge burning. Christianity had ended slavery, and permeated society and brought thousands of distinctive blessings, which from their familiarity we did not recognize without reflection. At the close of the lecture, Mr. G. M. Roger moved a vote of thanks, seconded by Dr. Fife.

Dr. Sexton in reply thanked the audience and intimated, amidst hearty applause, that he would probably pay Peterborough another visit about August next.

Rev. Mr. Bennett pronounced the benediction.

Mr. Arnott's friends in England have been looking after the matter, and they assure him that their claim to the money can be established.

Mr. J. W. Johnston, of this township, received a small packet of the new White Belgian oats, from a Philadelphia firm some time ago, and from the third crop which he has grown he has reaped 400 bushels. On Wednesday of last week he drew 50 bags to the station, which he sold to a Toronto seedsman. The bags which are of the common two-bushel size, weighed 5,210 pounds, and he received $150 for the load. This pays better than wheat raising at 75 cents per bushel.

HIGH SCHOOL ENTRANCE EXAMINATIONS.

The High School Entrance Regulations have recently been revised by the Education Department, with a view to secure increased efficiency on the part of both Public and High Schools. The following is a synopsis of the changes:—

The subjects of examination remain as before, but the details under some of the heads have been altered. In Writing a special paper will be set of a practical nature, and marks will be assigned on most of the other papers for writing and neatness. In Drawing, half the marks assigned to the subjects may be awarded as the result of the examiners' inspection of the candidate's drawing-book. Next July the examination on History will be confined, as hitherto, to the outlines of English History. In subsequent examinations the outlines of Canadia History are prescribed, in addition to those in English History; and candidates will be expected to have a general knowledge of how England, Canada, and Ontario are governed. The Literature selections from the Royal and Canadian Series of Readers are those hitherto prescribed; but new selections have been made from the old Ontario Series. After Dec., 1885, the selections will be from the Fourth Book of the Series of Readers now being prepared by the Education Department; some of which selections will be changed each half year. In Reading, a general knowledge will be required of vocal expression, with special reference to emphasis, inflection, and pause. The passages for each examination in this subject will be selected by the Department, and the candidates will in addition be expected to satisfy the examiners that he reads intelligently as well as intelligibly Of the marks assigned for Composition, a maximum of about one-third may be awarded on the papers in History and English Literature. One feature of the regulations in regard to the subjects of examination is, that full details have been given of the course to be followed by the teacher. The values of the different subjects are now as follows:—

Reading	50
Writing	50
Orthography and Orthoepy	50
Literature	100
Arithmetic	100
Grammer	100
Composition	100
History	75
Drawing	50

As before, one-third of the maximum of the marks on each paper is also required.

As in the case of the Fourth Book and Spelling Paper for Dec., 1884, the value of the correct answers to the questions set on each paper will exceed the maximum prescribed above, except in Writing, Reading, and Orthography and Orthoepy; but the Papers will be so constructed that a well prepared candidate may obtain the prescribed maximum within the given time. The object of the preceding regulation is to allow the Departmental examiners to present a greater variety of questions, and thereby to enable the candidate to show more readily than heretofore whether he is in a condition to benefit by a High School Course.

UNVEILING THE STATUE OF SIR GEO. CARTIER.

On Thursday the ceremony of unveiling the statue of Sir George Cartier in the Parliament square, Ottawa, was performed by Sir John Macdonald, in the presence of 2,000 spectators. A high eulogium was passed on the character of Cartier by Sir John and others. The statue represents Sir George Cartier in the act of delivering a speech. His body reposes firmly on his right leg, the left one being advanced. The head is turned to the right. The right hand points to a scroll held in the left hand, on which are inscribed the words, "Le Gouvernement est d'opinion que la confederation est necessaire." The statue is of bronze, and is nine feet high. It rests on a twelve-foot pedestal of gray granite, inscribed with one word "Cartier." The resemblance to the deceased statesman is said to be a striking one. It is the work of the Canadian artist, Herbert, of Montreal.

Seriously Ill.

The Weak and the Impure.

The merry little mountain brook, as it lightly dances over the rocks and sparkles in the sunshine on its way down to the river, is pure and clean. It is active; therefore, it is healthy. It is vigorous; therefore, it resists impurity.

But the sluggish pool, where the current is not strong enough to keep the water in motion, is stagnant and foul. Dirt and rubbish are thrown into it, and they there. Impurities and vile odors make it a breeder of disease and an object to be avoided.

When the blood is strong and rich and red, and vigorously courses its accustomed rounds through arteries and veins, the system is hearty and healthy.

When the blood is thin and poor and weak, impurities and defilements creep into it, and it has no strength to cast them out. Then the system runs down.

Shaker Blood Syrup purifies and enriches the Blood; curing Scrofula, Cancer, Rheumatism, Catarrh, Ulcers and Skin and Blood diseases of every description.

To Our Subscribers.

There is still a number of our subscribers who have omitted to remit the amount due by them on account of subscription to THE EXAMINER. We would remind these that we should be pleased to have their immediate and practical attention to the subject. We have no inclination to unduly urge such subscribers to settle, but in fairness to ourselves and our business engagements, we must ask them not to overlook the matter any longer.

A Serious Result of Bungling.

The importance of the manufacturing industries that line the banks of the river here, is shown by the great commotion created last Saturday when it was discovered that the water in the river had fallen so low that they had all to shut down. The Dominion Government contractor at Lakefield, to enable him to put in a coffer dam, shut off the water at Young's Point and Buckhorn. The consequence was that the following establishments had to cease working: Beginning at Ashburnham—the Rogers Flouring and Oatmeal Mills, the Rogers Saw Mill, Mowry's Agricultural Works, McFadden's Furniture Factory, Wand's Planing Mills, Faint's Woollen Mills, Wilson's Woollen Mills, Brodie's Woollen Mills, Clegg's Flouring Mills, Forsyth's Fanning Mill Factory, McKee's Planing Mills, McKee's Furniture Factory, the Dickson Estate Shingle Mills, the Dickson Estate Saw Mills, the Electric Light Company's machinery, the Dominion Flouring Mills, Hilliard's Flouring Mills, the Water Works Company's pumps, and the Auburn Woollen Mills.

The fall of the water was some four feet, completely closing the machinery of all the above-mentioned industries. The loss, even for one day, will be enormous. The woollen mills will particularly suffer. At the Auburn Mills 140 hands are idle (and the loss of last Monday's water was over $1,000), and at Brodie's some 70 or 80; the mills will be delayed in filling orders during their busiest season, trade connections, from their inability to fill contracts, will be broken, and immense injury, difficult to reduce to dollars and cents, will be the result. Other industries will suffer likewise, and the loss to proprietors and inconvenience to the public will be exceedingly great. For twenty-four hours and more the pump at the water works could run at only ten pounds pressure, so that for that time the business portion of the town was at the mercy of any fire that might have broken out. Besides the ordinary water supply was shut off from consumers, for the pumps were not able to keep the mains and service pipes sufficiently filled to keep them from freezing. And it is not known how long this state of things will last, and if it is discontinued, how soon it may be repeated. The element of doubt and uncertainty will be added to the actual loss entailed. The ice in the races will fall to the bottom and other ice accumulate on the top of that; in fact, there is no computing where the trouble will cease. Besides, when the water is again let on by raising the stop-logs, there will be danger of damaging flooding of the several premises.

All this trouble, loss, annoyance and interruption of a vast business is caused to admit of the erection of a coffer dam that will cost about $100 or $150. The trouble might have been avoided, but it would have cost the contractor a little more to have adopted another method, and it seems that he felt justified in taking a course that will cause in one day more damage than the whole amount of his contract. And this is not the first trouble thus caused. Last summer, for two or three days, water power users along the river were put to similar loss, annoyance and inconvenience from the same cause.

Of course the contractor is primarily to blame, but he will no doubt reason that he had a right to consult his own interests. But the real blame must rest on the engineer in charge of the navigation works, and on the Government. The Dominion Government are ultimately to blame. Ever since this Government took the oversight of matters from the control of the resident engineer there has been nothing but the most complete bungling. Mr. Rubidge, the successor to the resident engineer, is apparently a stranger to the district in which his duties lie and does not know or appreciate the immense interests dependent on a regular and uninterrupted supply of water. The Government is to blame for employing a superintending engineer who is so neglectful of his duties and indifferent to the public interests as to permit in connection with a work over which he is placed, a course of action, in order to lessen a contractor's expenses, that leads to the closing down of a large chain of industrial establishments, throwing hundreds of men out of employment, and deranging business relations and engagements, reaching to every part of the Dominion.

The manufacturers and mill owners interested are determined not to submit to such expensive nonsense. On Monday night a large deputation of them went to Ottawa to represent the matter to the Government and insist on its taking the action, which its subordinates, if competent and willing, should have anticipated long ago. The neglect and carelessness of the Government puts these business men to a large amount of trouble and expense, which by a little intelligence and attention might be avoided. If the Trent navigation enterprise received as much attention as a great national and public work as it gets as a political machine, the disgraceful bungling and utter disregard for the public interests indicated above would not have to be recorded and condemned.

From the day the Dominion Government usurped the control of the Lakefield Dam, and removed it from the charge of the Ontario Government, where it properly belonged, there has been bungling and dissatisfaction. Under the administration of the local Government there was no such disastrous mismanagement. We hope the local Tory politicians who toadied to the Dominion Government and badgered them till the Lakefield dam was taken out of the control of the local Government, are satisfied with the result of their conspiracy. That action was the first cause in a series of causes that have led to their friends and neighbours owning manufactories along the river, being subjected to thousands of dollars of direct loss, and no end of annoyance. But Tory party spite must be vented on the Reform Government of Ontario, no matter what private and public interests suffer. The Dominion Government are making a miserable muddle of the Trent Navigation Scheme, and particularly so since the present engineer was put in charge the matter. If the contractor of the works at Burleigh Falls, had not been grossly deceived by the incomplete and misleading plans and specifications prepared by the Government engineers, he would not have had to cease work, and his contract would have been well advanced towards completion. But he found when he got to work, that the actual conditions were so widely at variance with the Departmental plans that a dispute arose with the government that led to suspension of operations. Thus Government indifference and the appointment of incompetent engineers has led to a serious delay. The facts show that the Tory Government are perfectly indifferent as to the prosecution of the work, and as it is conducted by them the Trent Valley canal, scheme is a first class fraud. At the rate attained under the present regime, a baby, to see the completion of the Trent Valley Canal, will have to live to the age that obtained in Admite days.

Since the above was in type the deputation alluded to has returned from Ottawa, having successfully accomplished the object of its journey. The result is that Mr. R. B. Rogers, C.E., has been placed in charge of the line of waters affected by the late blunders, and we may now expect that an intelligent interest will be taken in and a careful supervision exercised over the matters that so largely affect our manufacturing industries, and a repetition of the late culpable blunders made impossible. The Government must have had a lively sense of their guilty neglect in the premises or they would not have so promptly consented to an appointment which will remedy the grave evils complained of.

An Explanation Wanted.

The following circular letter lately issued from the office of the Clerk of the county of Peterborough, explains itself:

SIR,—I am directed to enclose you a copy of a resolution, adopted by the council of the county of Peterborough, asking for the united influence of the several municipalities and other interested parties, in urging on the Dominion Government a more vigorous prosecution of the construction of the Trent Valley Canal.

As the early construction of the Canal will not only be of great value as a Dominion work, but of incalculable advantage to the municipalities on the route, the council of this county relies on your co-operation in urging on the Government during this session of Parliament, to make a further substantial grant of money for the aforesaid purposes.

The Warden of the county instructs me to say that he trusts you will join the deputation, and requests the favor of your at once communicating with him, (address R. C. Strickland Esq., Lakefield P. O.) so that he may, with as little delay as possible, get the Minister of Railways and Canals to appoint a day to receive the deputation.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
EDG. PEARSE,
County Clerk.

County Clerk's Office,
Peterboro', 4th Feb., 1885.

COPY OF RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY THE COUNCIL OF THE COUNTY OF PETERBOROUGH.

Moved by Mr. Hicks, seconded by Mr. Sanderson,—

"That the Warden communicate with the Wardens of the counties, and Mayors of the town and cities along the line of the Trent Valley Canal, and also with the Montreal Corn Exchange, requesting them to form a deputation to wait on the Dominion Government during the present session, to urge upon it the advisability of giving a further and more substantial grant of money towards the construction of the said Canal."

(Signed) R. C. Strickland,
County Council Chamber, Warden.
Peterborough, 30th Jan., 1885.

The circular and resolution speak for themselves, but they are not what requires explanation. What we should like to see explained is the necessity for the promulgation of such documents. It is due the Midland district especially to know why the Trent Valley Canal scheme requires to be so constantly shaken up to keep it alive, like a man who is overdosed with some narcotic poison. The Government, through Sir Charles Tupper, made itself thoroughly acquainted with the merits of the scheme, by sending the now High (priced) Commissioner on a junketting tour over the route of the proposed canal. He professed himself profoundly impressed with the feasibility, importance and necessity of the work. This was in 1880. In the session of 1881, (the Government having decided to bring on the general election the next year,) a small appropriation was voted for the work, and that is the end of it. As far as the Dominion Government is concerned the project is dead, and a fresh batch of deputations, as reminders of its existence in the minds of the public of this district, is necessary. What the Government should explain is why this important work is thus neglected, while money is lavished by millions on other enterprises. Look at the vast millions devoted to the Canadian Pacific Railway. While this great highway is a necessity it must be remembered that its natural complement is the Trent Valley Canal. By means of the latter, the produce of the North-West would have a direct water way to the Atlantic seaboard from Port Arthur. The line in the North-West would thus be able to move all this produce to its fresh water terminus, and the remaining portion of the line, which runs through a better settled country, would not be glutted, in addition to other traffic, with the grain traffic that would pass to the ocean by the way of the Trent Valley Canal. And still this great work is neglected, and the people of this district have to beg the Government for justice in the matter. Why is this so? Is it because the Government have the assurance of the solid support of the representatives of this district, no matter how much its claims are ignored? It is time this trifling was done with. Let the deputations that may go to Ottawa speak plainly on the matter, and give the Government to understand that the Trent Valley Canal must be constructed, and that, too, independently of political considerations. No mealy-mouthed remonstrances will answer. The apologetic tone of the Review won't fill the bill. We want something more vigorous than its half hearted suggestion:

"A substantial grant to forward the construction of the Trent Valley Canal would meet with very general approval."

Here we have milk-and-water, when we want "blood and iron."

The Question of Loyalty.

Sir John is exceedingly brave when not confronted by an enemy, and the result of his last "pot-valiant" exhibition leads him to repeat that he had not on the occasion more discretion than valour, and will probably teach him that it is not always safe to revile and slander an absent foe. In his Montreal banquet self-glorification speech, Sir John wandered from the subject of himself and his florid pantaloons to make a venomous and vindictive onslaught on Sir Richard Cartwright, among other things, attacking the latter's loyalty. He is now, no doubt, very sorry that he did so. In the debate on the address in the House of Commons, Sir Richard's turn came, and to the Chieftain's face he gave some mordant reminiscences in return for Sir John's slanderous back-biting diatribe. To show that the Chieftain was trending on dangerous ground when he invited a comparison of loyalty, Sir Richard pointed out that the Tory leader was loyal so long as it paid, and reminded him of the time when he egged on a mob to rotten-egg a Governor-General and burn the Parliament buildings. The Premier's treachery to the Marquis of Lorne was revived. It was also shown that Sir John had admitted Annexationists to his Cabinet. Upon the head of a party which make a specialty of its loyalty, these home thrusts will probably have a salutary effect, and he will, perhaps, be a little less bumptious than usual the remainder of the session. The Tory organs, of course, call Sir Richard's castigation "coarse;" but the cowardly attack that led to it is, one must suppose, to their minds, the acme of knightly courtesy and culture. It is necessarily dignified and refined for the "Chieftain" to vary the cloying delicacy and refinement of a public speech by threatening to "slap your —— chops," and to introduce (otherwise) vulgar profanity into what we are asked to regard as the delivery of a statesman. It, seemingly, makes a vast difference whose bovine is disembowelled.

The Centralization Mania.

Though so disastrously and repeatedly worsted in his attempts, especially in respect of Ontario, to centralize power at Ottawa, Sir John keeps up the attempt to bring political grist to his mill. When he finds pliant tools his schemes are more easily compassed. He and his colleagues are busily engaged in cabinet manufacture for Manitoba. The new provincial government for the Prairie Province is not only organized at Ottawa but is to be "run" from that great centralising point. Thus Sir John will have the Province of Manitoba bound hand and foot and subject to his wishes. He needs not fear, from that source, any criticism of the Dominion Government land and railway policy. Whatever political schemes he may require assistance in from this quarter, he will be in a position to command. We can now understand the ardent desire of Sir John to place Ontario under Tory rule. He has made systematic and energetic endeavours to compass this object that cannot be explained by the simple desire for party triumph. He worked for something more substantial. By securing the co-operation of a large and influential Province like Ontario in his centralizing policy, he reasoned that he would have made a huge stride towards rupturing the bond of Confederation, and bringing about his aim of a Legislative union. This would afford so much greater means for satisfying his lust for power, that his preference for it to Confederation is easily understood. The people of Canada at large should rejoice that Ontario remains loyal to Liberalism. Ontario is the bulwark of the Confederation. It is the lion in Sir John's path. Hence his hatred to this Province; hence his motive for assailing not only her electorate but her elect with his bribery brigades. The people of Ontario will hesitate long before they place the control of affairs in the hands of the Tory party, or, which is the same thing, in the hands of Sir John Macdonald.

The rank and file of the Tory party may be super-saturated with loyalty, but some of the leading lights who have or have had positions in the Dominion cabinet, do not seem to be afflicted with any considerable surplus. Sir George Cartier, whose statue the Dominion Government has made the people pay for, was once, according to the Fredericton Gleaner, a proscribed traitor. Sir David Macpherson was turned out of the militia for disloyalty. Sir A. T. Galt openly advocated independence; Sir John Rose was an annexationist. Sir Leonard Tilley was a member of a secret society for the severance of British connection, and Sir John Macdonald's organ, the Mail, said if the N. P. should destroy British connection, "so much the worse for British connection." Fine preachers of loyalty these.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy surpasses all.

Editorial Notes.

The Temperance act will be submitted to the vote in the county of Drummond on the 5th of March.

Ontario has achieved a proud position under a wise and progressive Reform Administration of her affairs for over a dozen years. England does us the honor of following our example in making public education a department of the Government, and now the Australian colonies have resolved to follow the example of Ontario, and establish agricultural colleges. In the Victoria Parliament a bill has been introduced to provide for the establishment of institutions of this character.

The manufacturers of knitted woollen goods, finding that there is an over-production in these lines, are arranging for keeping up the price. The mills can be shut down and the loss of profit by this can be made up to the owners by increasing the price of the surplus stock on hand. The interests of the operatives, who will thus be thrown out of employment, and of consumers is not considered in this nice little N. P. arrangement. But the N. P. never had a soft side for either the workman or the consumer; its tender mercy is towards the manufacturers and monopolists.

Hon. Mr. Mowat, in concluding his speech in reply to Mr. Meredith, on the address, concludes as follow:—"In conclusion I have just to congratulate my friends here and those whom they represent that we have been so successful in all that we have done that there is not one single thing my hon. friend (Mr. Meredith) opposite has to blame us for. He rejoices with us in various matters and approves of all that we have done and all that in this Speech we declare our intention of doing." (Prolonged applause.) It will thus be seen that the Government of Ontario have not only been managing the affairs of the Province economically and well, but satisfactory to the leader of the Opposition, when he has to face his statements in the House.

The Mail still keeps hammering away at the school reader question, apparently determined to extract the last molecule of political capital out of it. Its animus is evident, when its contentions are discredited by its own admissions. It asserts that "beyond question," the old series of readers in appearance and "get up" compare unfavorably with Mr. Ross' new series. Much has been made of the proffered bond of the Warwick's to publish the new series at a much lower rate than the present publishers. The Mail also admits that this bond is not to be depended on when it mentions the failure of a similar bond that firm had given in connection with the publication of the old series. The organ says:

"When Warwick & Son and Campbell & Son began printing this old National Series seventeen years ago, they entered into a bond by which they bound themselves to produce the books up to a certain prescribed standard of quality * * * the standard was gradually departed from in spite of the bond until at length the lowest depth was reached in the case of the books Mr. Ross was exhibiting."

Thus the statement of fact which the circumstances will not allow the Mail to distort, conflicts with its laudation of Messrs. Warwick's offer. If one bond of this firm was not adhered to, what guarantee has the public that the proffered bond would save the new series if applied to it, from reaching the "lowest depth" of deterioration. Striving to make political capital out of the new readers leads the Tory organs to envolving in both senses (a) ridiculus mus.

THE BRIBERY PLOT.

The Demurrer Overruled and the Conspirators to Go to Trial.

On Monday at Osgoode Hall Chief Justice Wilson, Mr. Justice Armour, and Mr. Justice O'Connor delivered judgment on the demurrer to the indictment charging Bunting, Meek, Wilkinson, and Kirkland with Bribery and Conspiracy. Mr. Justice O'Connor thought the demurrer should be sustained, while the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Armour agreed to overruling it, and it was therefore overruled. The defendants stand directed to appear on Thursday next at Osgoode Hall, then to decide whether they will allow sentence to be passed upon themselves, or whether they will plead to the indictment which has just been sustained.

Slowly and surely the meshes of the law are closing around the Conspirators. Their desperate devices to delay the trial have one by one failed them. It is to be doubted whether they will attempt further to avail themselves of legal technicalities. The Commission of Judges has found them all guilty of the offences charged against them. The Court of Queen's Bench has decided that the offences charged against them are crimes against the common law of the land. There has been no trace of wisdom in their strivings against the law. It is quite evident to all observers that, on the day when the Conspirators suddenly changed their tactics—the day on which the Grand Jury returned a True Bill against them, and they in their terror beheld the prison gates unfolding to receive them—the day on which they abandoned their protestations of anxiety for investigation, and first resorted to the tactics of obstruction and delay, they made a terrible mistake. The result of these tactics has been that the case has been cleared of all doubts. One after another the law points in the case have been decided against the Conspirators. New evidence has been obtained, and the case against them has been made so clear that the wildest of partisans can no longer doubt their guilt. It would have been better for them had they faced their trial and taken their punishment ten months ago.

There is the appearance of serious trouble between Italy and Turkey, arising out of Italian occupation of certain ports on the Red Sea. A special cablegram believes that Italy is acting with the approval of England, and that Turkey's protests will not amount to anything.

Peter Kieffer, Buffalo, says: "I was badly bitten by a horse a few days ago, and was induced by a friend, who witnessed the occurrence, to try Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. It relieved the pain almost immediately, and in four days the wound was completely healed. Nothing can be better for fresh wounds." See that you get the genuine Dr Thomas' Eclectric Oil, as there are imitations on the market.

How to Clean Marble.

Housekeepers who have tried in vain to remove stains from marble will read with interest the following advice from an exchange: Brush the dust off with a piece of chamois, then apply with a brush a good coat of gum arabic about the consistency of thick mucilage, expose it to the sun or wind to dry. In a short time it will peel off. If all the gum should not peel off, wash it with clean water and clean cloth. If the first application does not have the desired effect, it should be tried again. Another method is to rub marble with the following solution: One-quarter of a pound of soft soap, one-quarter of a pound of whiting, and one ounce of soda and a piece of stone blue the size of a walnut; rub it over the marble with a piece of flannel, and leave it on for twenty-four hours, then wash it off with clean water, and polish the marble with a piece of flannel or an old piece of felt; or take two parts of common soda, one part of pumice stone and one part of finely-powdered chalk, sift it through a fine sieve, and mix it with water, then rub it well over the marble, then wash the marble over with soap and water. To take the stains out of white marble, take one ounce of oxgall, one gill of lye, one and one-half tablespoonfuls of turpentine; mix and make into a paste with pipe-clay; put on the paste over the stain, and let it remain for several days. To remove oil stains, apply common clay saturated with benzine. If the grease has remained in long, the polish will be injured: but the stain will be removed. Ironmold or inkspots may be taken out in the following manner: Take half an ounce of butter of antimony and one ounce of oxalic acid, and dissolve them in one pint of rain water; add enough flour to bring the mixture to a proper consistency. Lay it evenly on the stained part with a brush, and, after it has remained for a few days, wash it off, and repeat the process if the stain be not wholly removed.

A Drunken Flock of Crows.

Charles Fogg is a married man and lives with his father-in-law near Waterbury, Conn. There is also engaged upon the place an ingenious young fellow who does all kinds of work. Crows had become very troublesome and destructive in the corn fields, and this lad had read in some wise agricultural paper that corn boiled in alcohol and distributed over the fields would be freely taken by the crows, and the birds would become intoxicated, and could be easily captured. Not having alcohol, he took cider and a bottle of laudanum, boiling his corn and distributing it in the field. He acted privately, preferring to experiment without telling the family. Nothing came of it for several days, and the lad himself had almost forgotten it; but one morning an old lady of the neighborhood came in and requested the men folks to come up and see what was the matter in the corn field. She said millions of crows were there, and would not fly away nor budge for her but were "acting awful funny." Sure enough, when the men and the lad went out there, they found hundreds of crows rolling about on the ground, flapping their wings, cawing and making themselves generally ridiculous. In fact, they were all drunk as lords, and a number of them were easily dispatched.—New London Day.

Read the Old Novels.

The trouble with most young people is that they have no one to advise them what to read and so they read aimlessly and at random, taking up the very latest novel, because it is new, in preference to those who have stood the test of time. Emerson's dvice to read no book until it has been before the world for a year is applicable especially to novels. It is true that a novel reflects the passing manners of the time and thus in a few years grows old-fashioned; but the best novels, that appeal to the universal human heart, retain their immortal freshness under their old clothes and may be read again and again with undiminished interest. If the summer idlers who are looking for something new to read would give up the new books for a while and try some of the old ones, the experiment could hardly prove o er than profitable. Of the hundreds of novels published every year a small percentage may survive. The reader has to winnow the chaff to get at the few grains of wheat. Upon the whole it is more satisfactory to go at once to the wheat that has already passed the winnowing of time.—Philadelphia Times.

No Difference to Him.

Squire Patterson, wearing an air of deep concern, says the Arkansaw Traveler, approached his friend, Farmer Glover, and without speaking, leaned on the fence and sighed.

"What's the matter, squire?"

"I don't know what this country's comin' to. What should you think if your daughter should run away and marry an ignorant hired man?"

"Oh, I don't know squire, but I would not take it to heart if I were you. I would try to think the best."

"Would you forgive the girl?" asked the squire.

"Yes, I believe I would. There's no use in holding out you know. When did it happen?"

"Just awhile ago."

"Who performed the ceremony?"

"I did."

"What? Then you could not have been opposed to the marriage."

"Oh, it makes no difference to me," replied the squire, "for, you see, it's your daughter instead of mine."

Gambling Everywhere.

A traveler to Long Branch describes a thing characteristic of the speculative sort of business men who so largely make up the season's multitude at the famous seaside resort. A dozen men, lacking room in the smoking car of the crowded train, went to enjoy their cigars in the baggage car. Here was a baby carriage lying on its side, thus bringing one wheel uppermost and horizontal. Not a minute had elapsed before a broker wrapped a bit of paper around a spoke. "Now, gentlemen," he said "stand around the wheel of fortune while I whirl it thus," and he gave the wheel a turn. "It costs you 25 cents apiece, and the man in front of whom the marked spoke stops takes the pot. Make your game while the wheel is revolving." During the ride of an hour and a half, the impromptu game did not of an instant lag.—New York Sun.

At Breslau, L. I., the German settlers have made some valuable discoveries. In the so-called "pine barrens" they have found deposits of peat, marl, fine clay, brick clay and kaolin. In excavating the clay beds tools and Indian arrow-heads have been found, indicating that these were worked ages before the discovery of America.

LONDON DYNAMITE EXPLOSIONS.

The police are, it seems, in a fair way to succeed in securing the parties connected with the recent dynamite explosions in London and vigorous efforts are being made to strengthen their hands.

The Queen has expressed a desire to contribute a sum sufficient to supplement and make effective any reward the government may decide to offer for the arrest and conviction of the dynamiters. It is believed that the result will be the organization of a national force for the object suggested.

The police have obtained special information which will probably warrant an indictment against Cunningham for personally operating the dynamite which caused the explosion near Gower street railway station. The guard on the train and the sergeant of police who examined the passengers have identified Cunningham as one of the three men who were suspected of having caused the explosion. It is also stated that several persons have identified Cunningham as the man who was seen in the immediate vicinity of each of the recent underground railway explosions directly after their occurrence. The Government appears to be weaving a web around him that may cost him his life, or result in his being sent to penitentiary for a very long period. At present he is only charged with conspiracy under the Explosions Act, but the Government prosecutor has reserved the right to substitute the charge of high treason, which is a capital offence. Cunningham is only 22 years of age.

The residence of Mr. Gladstone at Hawarden has been placed under special police protection.

The Dungarvan branch of the National League has adopted resolutions denouncing the dynamite outrages, and disclaiming all connection with such diabolical forms of agitation.

THE THREATS AGAINST THE OTTAWA PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS.

The London correspondent of the Globe says that the dynamite conspiracy appear to be taking more definite shape. The Times this evening states that one of its reporters was told this morning by a detective that a meeting was held last night a few miles from the city. It was filled by many Montrealers who have lately joined the cause. Several well-known faces were noticed. After a few speeches of congratulation over the recent defeat of the English at Khartoum, the plan of destruction against the Parliament buildings at Ottawa was discussed. A few voices were heard in favour of placing the infernal machines in the Parliament galleries, but the majority opposed the project on the ground that a large number of friends of the sacred cause might be massacred with the rest. The police are keeping a sharp lookout on the banks and public buildings.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 4th.

The Legislature has hardly yet settled down to hard work. It is probable from present indications that the session will be a brief one. There promises to be less talking than at other sessions. There is no fight in the opposition. That demoralized body has not the stimulus supplied by the prospect of the bribery plot placing them in power, as at the last session. However, some show of opposition will be made. An attack on the Agricultural College is, it is understood, to be engineered by your own "Sarah," but I fancy his agitation on the subject will, like his researches last session, prove to be a tempest in a "tea-pot." Mr. Carnegie is a most useful member of the opposition; he will sally out on a recent landing to nothing, which no other member with any self respect will enter on.

To-day's session was not a very important one.

Mr. Meredith was informed that the course of the Government in reference to declaring East Simcoe vacant would be known in a few days.

Mr. Wood, of North Hastings, in his enquiries in reference to the small-pox outbreak in Haggerford, started an interesting discussion in which it was brought out that the outbreak had been a formidable one. The Provincial Treasurer stated that there had been 200 cases, of which 45 had proved fatal. The course of the Government was vindicated by no other an opponent than Hon. Mr. Morris, who from his experience as Minister of Interior, with similar epidemics in the North-West, could speak ex cathedra, as it were. He lauded the prompt action taken in stamping out the disease, by the Provincial Board of Health; it was due to that action that the scourge had not extended over a large portion of the Province.

Mr. Carnegie is getting himself into training for his attack on the Agricultural College by beginning at the rudiments—the wild lands. His motion for a return showing particulars of the number of lots sold or applied for in several of the townships of Peterborough and Haliburton, since 1880, will involve an immense amount of labor, with, it seems to those cognisant of the facts, very little promise of result. Mr. Carnegie's past experience in barking up the wrong tree does not discourage him, and since he has discarded his old scrap book, he may be seeking materials for a new one at the public expense.

Mr. Hardy presented the report of the Minister of Education for 1884, and the reports of vital statistics for the Province. The former is a large volume of 280 pages. Its complete character and fullness of information, are what we might expect from the practical, virile executive action that Hon. Mr. Ross applies to his official duties. The report states that the school population of Ontario shows a decrease of 5,026 as compared with last year. Though the total school population has fallen off, the average attendance has increased.

Mr. Ermatinger called for a copy of the judgment and findings of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in reference to the Boundary matter. Mr. Ermatinger reads only the Tory papers and as none of these had the courage to publish it, he is to have the pleasure of its perusal at the public expense.

Several notices of motion for returns and enquiries as to ministerial intentions were given and made, among them, one by Mr. Gibson of Hamilton, in reference to the construction of new Parliament buildings.

THURSDAY.

Hon. Mr. Ross introduced to-day his bill to amend and to some extent consolidate the school law, and his explanations on it showed that the changes were such as to meet the approval of the House. The machinery of the bill seems to be exceedingly simple and workable.

Mr. Morris asked the Attorney-General his intentions in reference to new buildings to replace the present brick barns, and was informed that the Government would take the House into its confidence before taking action.

Mr. Harcourt's enquiry foreshadowed the possibility of legislation leading to the preparation of a suitable history of Canada for use in public and high schools.

As usual the corporal's guard which follows Mr. Meredith, has raised a feeble cry of attack against the Minister of Education's report. They are reinforced by the discontented book publishers, who wax virtuously indignant at being no longer able to prey on the Ontario public, and by a scorched ex-editor of the Educational Monthly who has managed to get insertion for a most vituperative attack on Mr. Ross in the Toronto Week. It should be noted that the article in question in no way represents the general tone of the Week, which is by no means an unfair critic of the Education Department. Nothing could be more popular than Mr. Ross' programme—the superannuation fund is a burden well got rid of, and the holding school trustee elections on the same day with the municipal elections, and to adopt the ballot, are long desired moves in the right direction. The Art School established last year by the Education Department is well attended this winter, and it is to be hoped that like success will attend the Art Schools in the other central cities of the Province. Art education, including the rules of perspective and the power of drawing models, is of the utmost use in every kind of manufacturing industry.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 6th.

To-day there was little work done, a few petitions were presented; and bills to amend the Consolidated Municipal Act of 1883, and the Municipal Act, received their first readings.

The Government shows it has the interests of the Opposition at heart. To-day, on motion of Hon. Mr. Fraser, seconded by Hon. Mr. Hardy, the printing of the evidence given before the Bribery Commission was ordered, for distribution among the members. It will make cheerful reading for Mr. Meredith and his friends. The former can compare notes with Mr. Jeremiah Merrick and find out how he was Jerry-mandered out of his testimony before the Commission.

Hon. Mr. Ross stated that the Government had not yet settled upon a course of action in reference to University Confederation.

Mr. Gibson brought up his motion, which was agreed to, for copies of all correspondence between the Local and Federal Governments with reference to the Dominion License Act.

The Government have nothing to conceal on the School Reader question. Mr. Harcourt, a prominent supporter, has given notice of a motion of enquiry of the Ministry as to when the new series of readers may be completed; who is engaged in compiling them; what are the provisions for revising them before authorization, and what is the cost of the parts (First Reader, Parts I. and II.) now ready. No doubt the information that is forthcoming will be entirely satisfactory to the public and show that their interests alone have been consulted.

Mr. Creighton is also after information on the same subject, and Mr. Broder is also thirsting for knowledge, such as is to be got from school books.

Can it be possible that Mr. Carnegie has "weakened" in regard to his proposed attack on the Agricultural College? He was out of the way to-day when his motion was reached for the appointment of a special committee to inquire into the working of the Ontario Agricultural College and Farm. The motion was passed over and the Government feel safe a little longer.

MONDAY—FEBRUARY 9th.

Mr. Ermatinger moved to-day the motion of which he gave notice, for papers and documents relating to the Boundary Award matter. Mr. Ermatinger's object was plainly to bring out something to soften the defeat of the Tory party on this question. Hon. Mr. Hardy brought down all the papers asked for.

Mr. Meredith intimated that he and his followers wanted to expend their oratory on the question of the vacancy of East Simcoe.

Mr. Fraser introduced a bill to declare that the $1,600 Tory bribery funds impounded by the Speaker last session belong to this Province. The Dominion Government's claim to the funds has not yet been promulgated. They evidently intend to take it out of the bribery quartette, who made such a bungle of the bribery business. The latter will be in a nice box when they are called on to account for the money entrusted to them and find it in the strong box of Ontario.

Mr. Meredith condescended to-day to applaud Hon. Mr. Ross for the early introduction of his Education Bill, thus allowing ample time for discussion. It is very unkind of Mr. Meredith towards the Mail to acknowledge that there is any good in Mr. Ross.

Mr. Carnegie again showed his anxiety for assistance in finding a mare's nest among the licenses for Peterborough. He got the "Chieftain's" comfort—that the returns would be presented "ere long."

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

In and Around Our Legislative Halls.

(Correspondence of THE EXAMINER.)

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 4th.

Our conscript Fathers, the senators, are to have a jolly time this session. There are so many applications for divorce that they will have to double upon committees on the several cases. The fondness for this necessary nastiness of these cases shown by these venerable gentlemen accounts for the tendency of bald heads to be prominent in the front rows at a variety theatre. Senator Alexander is raising a row because Sir David Macpherson's portrait is so much larger and more prominently placed than those of other Speakers of that body; he is also stirring up the Government for its neglect to realize all the assets of the Bank of Upper Canada in respect of its debt of $160,000 due the Dominion.

Mr. McCarthy, in the report of the Debates Committee, recommended cutting off the early sheet copies of Hansard from journalists and presenting them with a bound copy or two instead. The report was referred back to the Committee.

Sir Richard Cartwright proposes to test Sir Leonard's stump speech figures by asking for statistics respecting operatives and employes in factories.

Hon. Mr. Mackenzie asked for a return of the amounts derived from the sale of lands in the Disputed Territory. We may now expect an explanation of the zeal of some members of the Tory bribery brigade.

Sir John is generally a cool customer, but he was a little non-plussed to-day when Hon. Mr. Blake asked him if the Syndicate had shown any indications of another raid on the Dominion treasury. The manner of Sir John's reply showed that demands for financial assistance have been made and are under consideration of the Government. The country will likely have some ruinous financial proposal in reference to the matter sprung upon it towards the close of the session, when there will be no time to debate it in Parliament or discuss it in the country.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 5th.

Mr. McCarthy presented to-day the "same old bill" for setting up a Court of Railway Commissioners.

The bill of Mr. Cameron, of Huron, to amend the Election Act, so as to make bribery a criminal offence, will receive the solid opposition of the Tory members.

It has transpired that it was not the Syndicate that objected to building competing branch lines of railway in the North-West, but the paternal Dominion Government, who restrained their protegee, the members of the Syndicate, from squandering money on lines to develop the resources and aid in the settlement of the North-West.

Judge Clark, of Cobourg, of Pacific Railway fame, is in luck. Last year he absorbed $7,500 of the public money. He drew his salary of $2,000 as county judge, though, from the nature of other engagements he could not discharge its duties. His other pickings were, $4,050 as Intercolonial Railway Commissioner for nine months, and $1,200 as arbitrator in some Syndicate dispute. If Judge Clark is, like other men, unable to do two things at once, he is able to take pay for doing it, like the good Tory he is. That's only one little way the people's money goes.

Mr. A. F. Wood, M.P.P., of North Hastings, places himself in the way of temptation. He may be able to be loyal to Ontario, and yet be in the pay of Ontario's mortal enemy, Sir John, who rewards his supporters, whether they be members of his brigade or members of the Legislature. Mr. Wood drew $1,600 for services as valuator on the Trent Valley scheme and the Murray Canal.

The Postmaster-General has informed the House that the Government will not introduce a bill to lower the postal rate on letters to two cents.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 6th.

It has leaked out from the council chamber into the corridors that an Order-in-Council has been passed dividing the Dominion into seven customs districts, with an Inspector for each, at a salary of $2,000. The appetite for pap of Tory hangers-on must be satisfied by providing more provender.

After routine to-day, Hon. Mr. Pope presented a bill to provide for taking a census of Manitoba and a great part of the North-West. If the census shall be as well taken as the last Dominion census the Northwesterners are to be congratulated.

There was a little amusement consequent on Sir John's motion for the appointment of a special committee to report on the alleged necessity for an insolvency act. Hon. Mr. Blake suggested that the Government should take the responsibility of the proposed Legislation. Hon. Mr. Mills said if the Government felt incompetent to deal with the matter, they were hardly competent to nominate a committee to do so. Mr. Casey suggested that there was some constitutional question involved, and wondered how Sir John, after the success he had had recently as a constitutional authority, could confess that he needed the help of a committee. Sir John said the Government wanted assistance in making up its mind on the subject, whereupon Hon. Mr. Blake added, amidst cheers and laughter, that there was no reason to doubt the ignorance nor incapacity of the present Government.

In reply to Hon. Mr. Mills, Sir John Macdonald stated that it was not the intention of the Government to propose any legislation for defining the boundaries of Ontario on the west and north, and that the Government had the matter of the necessity of asking Imperial legislation on the subject, under consideration.

In reply to Mr. McMullen, Hon. Mr. Pope stated that Bribery Plot Wilkinson had received for services as land valuator in 1884, of the people's money to the amount of $330.

In spite of all his after-dinner buncombe in England, Sir John told the House the Government did not intend to deal with Imperial Federation this session.

Mr. Jackson asked explanation of the fact that whilst "Canada for the Canadians" was the battle cry of the Tories, in 1883 and 1884, $130,000 of the people's money had been spent in the United States for tugs and dredges.

The latest phase of the question of the Syndicate grab game is the statement that the Syndicate fearing that Parliament and the country will not stand another cash drain, are satisfied if the Government will give up its lien on the line held in security for the 30 millions "loan," leaving the country without security for its repayment, and making it, as Reform members and papers foretold it would become, a gift, or more strictly speaking, a steal.

The total expenditure of the Dominion for the seven months ending January 31st, was over a million dollars in excess of the revenue, and for the month of January itself, the expenditure was over two and a quarter millions of dollars greater than the revenue.

Sir Leonard Tilley has made up his mind at last. To-day he introduced his bill relating to the Consolidated Insurance act. It provides for making such associations as the United Workmen, Foresters and other benevolent associations subject to the inspection of the Superintendent of Insurance. These will be bound under penalties to make attested returns respecting their conditions and business.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 9th.

Mr. Robertson brought in a bill to-day making it a misdemeanor to leave unguarded holes in ice on frequented waters.

The Government are to ask the House this session to amend their ridiculous legislation respecting canned goods. Special legislation is also to be made to prevent Canada being made a base of dynamite operations.

Mr. Blake adroitly made Sir John show his hand again on the question of negotiations for "better terms" with the Syndicate. The gist of Sir John's reply to Mr. Blake's question, was that the Government had no present intentions of doing anything in the matter, but that a proposal might be sprung on the House any day hereafter.

It was shown that the Province of Ontario had given eight millions of dollars to aid local railways, and municipalities seven millions. The Dominion Government has usurped control of these roads, and petitions are pouring in from municipalities asking that they be recouped for the grants made. The confiscation of the roads by the Federal Government had the effect of relieving the roads from responsibility in respect of damages under Provincial laws.

The Governor-General has received a letter containing an offer to raise a regiment of French Canadian volunteers for service in Egypt.

The friction between England and Germany on account of Germany's colonial aggressions is decreasing. A special cablegram says it is believed that this fortunate result has been brought about through the influence of the reigning families rather than by the exertions of the Foreign Office.

A Model Fruit House.

A Pennsylvania man with a fancy for fruit farming, has built himself a retarding house for fruit, which cost $5,000, and which the Philadelphia Press describes as follows:

"To economize space it is built square, fifty feet each way. It has two walls of stone, each twenty-two inches thick, with an open space between of twelve inches, and this space filled in with charcoal, as a non-conductor of heat.—Inside of the inside wall the ice is piled four feet thick, maintained in place by studding and boards. Below the floor is another four feet of ice resting on a foot of charcoal, and above the room the ice is eleven feet thick, with three inches of wood above that; and when he builds another (if he ever does) he will make the ice fifteen feet thick above and six feet at the sides. Still this one works well; it never freezes in winter, nor does it waste ice rapidly in summer. The temperature is always from thirty-three to thirty-seven degrees. Of course there are no windows, and it is a real dungeon. There are inside and outside doors made something like safe doors and as nearly air-tight as possible. If one should happen to get shut in it would not be easy to get an alarm to the outer world. The melting ice from above is conducted down below the under floor in pipes and discharged where it will do the least harm. It takes from 1,000 to 1,900 tons of ice to fill this house, and it is supplied from an artificial pond on the place. The cost of filling is estimated at about 15 cents per ton.

Bad Coffee.

It is the exception rather than the rule to get a cup of good coffee at the hotels or restaurants in this country. In the provincial hotels and railway dining saloons as you go further in this respect you fare worse. There are a large variety of colorable decoctions that masquerade under the title of coffee that are entirely devoid of its aroma or taste. A writer in the Argonaut says:

There is no spot in the world where coffee is so badly made as in this country. And this arises from several causes. The first of these is the purchasing of coffee ground and roasted at grocery stores, where the sale is so small that the roasted coffee is often three weeks or a month old, and has, through exposure to the weather and influence of climate, entirely lost its aroma. The second cause is that the berry is often burnt instead of being properly roasted, and has, in consequence, a pungent, bitter flavor, instead of its natural flavor and aroma. The third cause is that in many hotels, restaurants, and even private houses, sufficient coffee is not used.

was the first preparation perfectly adapted to cure diseases of the scalp, and the first successful restorer of faded or gray hair to its natural color, growth, and youthful beauty. It has had many imitators, but none have so fully met all the requirements needful for the proper treatment of the hair and scalp. HALL'S HAIR RENEWER has steadily grown in favor, and spread its fame and usefulness to every quarter of the globe. Its unparalleled success can be attributed to but one cause: the entire fulfilment of its promises.

The proprietors have often been surprised at the receipt of orders from remote countries, where they had never made an effort for its introduction.

The use for a short time of HALL'S HAIR RENEWER wonderfully improves the personal appearance. It cleanses the scalp from all impurities, cures all humors, fever, and dryness, and thus prevents baldness. It stimulates the weakened glands, and enables them to push forward a new and vigorous growth. The effects of this article are not transient, like those of alcoholic preparations, but remain a long time, which makes its use a matter of economy.

THE RED FLAG.

BY

M. E. BRADDON.

Author of "Lady Audley's Secret," etc. etc. etc.

She had given herself over to the rule of her passionate nature in this new period of tumult and uncertainty, a time when all the old boundaries seemed to be swept away, the floodgates of passion opened. A queen, a goddess, in her chosen circle, she had come to think herself a being bound by no law, possessing the divine right of beauty and wit, free to pour out her love or her venom upon whom she would; and to-day Fate had brought her face to face with the man to whom she had given the impassioned love of her too fervid nature, for whose sake she had been, and must ever be, marble to every other lover.

"You are mad," he said quietly, "and your words are the words of a madwoman."

"They are true words. Seducer—for you seduced me into loving you—yes, as few men have ever been loved, as few women know how to love. Seducer! yes. Your every word, your every look, meant seduction, in those dear days when you and I wandered homewards in the midnight and moonlight, and loitered on the bridge or on the quay, and drank each other's whispers, and looked into each other's eyes, and our hands trembled as they touched. Liar! for though you never declared yourself my lover, all your words were steeped in love. When we have sat together, side by side in the theatre, my head leaning against your shoulder, our hands clasped as we drew nearer to each other, feeling as if we were alone in the darkened house—what need of words then to promise love? Your every look, your every touch, was a promise; and all those promises you broke when you deserted me for your new fancy; and by every touch of your hand, by every look in your eyes, I charge you with having promised me your lifelong love, I charge you with having lied to me!"

There was no doubt as to the reality of her feeling, the intensity of her sense of wrong done to her in those days of the past. Gaston stood before her, downcast and conscience-stricken.

Yes, if passionate looks and tender claspings of tremulous hands meant anything, he had so far pledged his faith—he was in so much a liar. His boyish fancy had been caught by this southern beauty, by this passionate nature, which made an atmosphere of warmth around it, and gave to the calm moonbeams of a Parisian midnight the seducing softness of the torrid zone. He had been drawn to her in those moonlit hours as young hearts are drawn together under the southern cross; and then came morning, and worldly wisdom and the sense of his own dignity; and he told himself, with a half-guilty feeling, that those looks and whispers on the moonlit quay meant nothing. A pretty woman who kept a popular cremerie must have admirers by the score; and when she was not being escorted to the Porte St. Martin by him, was doubtless tripping as lightly to the Chateau d'Eau with somebody else.

These were the amours passageres of youth, which count for nothing in the sum of a man's life.

Then came the new and better love. Kathleen's fair young face became the pole-star of his destiny; and from that hour he held himself aloof from Suzon Michel. And now she came upon him, like a guilty conscience, and charged him with having lied to her.

"I am very sorry that you should have taken our friendship so seriously," he said quietly. "I thought that I was only one among your many admirers—that you had such lovers as I by the score. So pretty a woman could not fail to attract suitors."

"I had admirers, as you say, by the score; but not one for whom I cared, not one upon whose breast my head ever rested as it lay on yours that night at the street-corner, when you kissed me for the first—last—time. It was within a week of that kiss you abandoned me forever."

"A foolish kiss," said Gaston, again trying to take things lightly; "but those eyes of yours had a magical influence in the lamplight. My dear soul, we were only children, straying a little way along a flowery path which leads to a wood full of wild beasts and all manner of horrors. Why make a fuss about it, since we stopped in good time, and never went into the wood?"

This was a kind of argument hardly calculated to pacify a jealous woman. Suzon took no notice of it.

"What was she better than I—that fair haired Irish girl—that you should forsake me to marry her?"

"Why make unflattering comparisons? I only know that from the hour I first saw her I lived a new life. You were charming, but you belonged to the old life; and so I was obliged to sing the old song:

"Adieu, paniers, vendangers sont faites!"

"C'est ca. You threw me aside as if I had been an empty basket after the vintage. But the vintage is not over yet, or at least the wine has still to be made, and I know what color it will be."

"Indeed!" he said gaily, rolling up a cigarette.

His watch was just expiring; and even if it were not, the discipline on the walls was not severe.

"It will be red, red, red—the color of blood."

The game of bouchon had just ended in a tempest of oaths and squabbling, and the patriots came swaggering and staggering towards the spot where Suzon stood with gloomy brow and eyes fixed upon the ground.

"Come, Citoyenne Michel, come to the canteen, and empty a bottle of petit bleu with us. 'Faut trincer le bec avant de partir. Let it not be said that the National Guard are without hospitality."

CHAPTER VII.

"HEADSTRONG LIBERTY IS LASHED WITH WOE."

New Year's Day had come and gone—a dark and dreary New Year for many a severed household; the mother and the children afar, the father lonely in Paris, not knowing if the letter which he writes daily to the wife he loves may not be written to the dead—for it is months since he has had tidings of wife or child; no one who can tell where the angel of death may have visited? A change had come over the great city and the spirits of the people—brave still, bearing their burden gallantly, still crying their cry of "No surrender!" but gay and light of heart no longer, bowed down by the weight of ever increasing wretchedness, pinched by the sharp pangs of hunger, enfeebled by disease, tortured by the bitter cold of a severe winter, which just now is the hardest trial of all. And now, in these dark days after Christmas, the ice is broken, the siege, for which Paris has been waiting patiently three months, begins in bitter earnest, and the thunder of the guns shakes earth and sky. The Line, the Mobile, the National Guard, all do their duty; but at best they can only die bravely for a cause that has long been lost. The bombardment ceases not day or night—now on this side, now on that. In the trenches the men suffer horribly. The snow falls on the living and the dead. Every sortie results in heavy loss. The ambulances are all full to overflowing. Trochu, the irresolute, the man of proclamations and manifestoes, has given place to Vinoy; but what generalship can hold a beleaguered city against those grim captains Famine and Death?

The women bear their burden with a quiet resignation which is among the most heroic things in history. Day after day, in the early winter dawn, they stand in the dismal train of householders waiting for the allotted portion of meat—a portion so scanty that it seems bitterest irony to carry it home to a hungry family. There they stand—ladies, servants, washerwomen, from the highest to the lowest—buffeted by the savage manifestation, starved pale, hollow eyed, shivering, pale, exhausted, but obstinately patient, each feeling that in this silent suffering she contributes her individual share of heroism to the defence of her country. So long as her rulers will hold out, so long as her soldiers will fight and die, so long will the women of France submit and suffer. Their voices will never be joined in the cry, "Surrender for our sakes."

The little children are fading off the face of this troubled scene. That is the worst martyrdom of all the mothers. The little faces are growing pinched and haggard, the fragile forms are drooping, drooping, day by day. The mother and fathers hope against hope. In a day or two the siege will be raised; milk and bread, fuel, comfort, luxury, the joy and light of life, will return to those desolate households; and the drooping children will revive and grow strong again. And, while the mothers hope, the little ones are dying, and the little coffins are seen, in mournful processions, day by day and hour by hour, in the cold cheerless street.

At the butchers'-shops, at the bakeries, there the same dismal train waits day after day. Everything is scarce. Butter is forty-five francs a pound; the coarsest grease, rank fat, which the servants would throw into the grease-tub in times of plenty, is sold for eighteen francs a pound. Gruyere cheese is a thing beyond all price, and is only bought by the rich, who wish to offer a costly present, like a basket of strawberries in February or peaches in March. Potatoes are twenty-five francs a bushel; a cabbage six francs; and garden-stuff, which last year one would have hardly offered to the rabbits, is now the luxurious accompaniment of the pot-au-feu de cheval. There is no more gas for the street-lamps, and the once brilliant Lutetia is a city of Cimmerian darkness. Bitterest scarcity of all, fuel has become prodigiously dear; and the poor are shivering, dying in their desolate garrets, pinched and blue with the cold of a hard winter.

Even among the well-to-do classes funds are running low. Provisions at siege prices have exhausted the purses of middle-class citizens. Stocks have been sold at a terrible loss, capital has been exhausted. Ruin and hunger stare in at the windows, and haunt the snowy night-like spectres.

For the poor the struggle is still sharper; but the poor are familiar with the pinch of poverty, with the pangs of self-denial. And then, perhaps, there is more done for the indigent in this day of national calamity than was done for them in the golden years of prosperity; albeit the Empire, whatever its shortcomings, was not neglectful to the houseless and the hungry.

In all these troubled days—with surrender and shame far away yonder at Metz, with defeat on this side and on that, here a general slain and there a gallant leader sacrificed, a little gain one day only to be counterbalanced by a greater loss the next, a threatened revolution, Flourens and his crew strutting, booted and spurred, on the tables in the Hotel de Ville, little explosions of popular feeling at Belleville, semi-revolt at Montmartre—through all this time of wild fears and wilder hopes the Red Flag has been boldly unfurled in the face of Paris, and has managed to pay its contributors. When bread and meat are so dear, who would stint himself of his favorite newspaper, in which, for two sous, he may read words that burn like vitriol, sentences that sound like the hissing of vinegar flung upon white-hot iron? The Red Flag finds some pretty strong language for the expression of its opinions about William, and Bismarck, and Moltke, and the hordes of black helmets yonder; but this language is mild as compared with the venom which it spits upon the Empire that is vanished—the Man of Sedan, the Man of Metz, the Emperor who surrendered Empire and army—all that could be surrendered—in the first hour of reverse; the general who kept the flower of the French army locked up within the walls of a beleaguered city, tied hand and foot, when they pining to be up and doing, hungering for the fray, eager to fling themselves into the teeth of the foe, to cut their way to liberty or to death, only to hand them over to the enemy like a flock of sheep when he found that his imperialist game was played out, and the stakes lost irretrievably.

At last came that which seemed the crowning humiliation, a capitulation which, to the soul of the patriots, was more shameful than that of Sedan, more irreparable than Strasburg, more fatal than Metz. Paris surrendered her forts, and opened her gates to the invader; France gave up her provinces, and pledged herself to the payment of a monstrous indemnity. The flag of the Germanic Confederation floated above Mont Valerien, and the Guard of the Emperor of Germany defiled along the Avenue of the Grand Armee to encamp in the Champs Elysees. Dark and mournful was the aspect of Paris on that never-to-be-forgotten day. The populace held themselves aloof from the region occupied by the invaders, as from the scene of a pestilence. Those who came as captors were as prisoners in the conquered city. The theatres were closed, and Paris mourned in gloom and silence for the ruin of France. And on the morning of departure, when, after an occupation of only twenty-four hours, the barbarous flood swept back, the Parisian gamin was seen pursuing the rear-guard of William's soldiery, burning perfumes on red-hot shovels, as if to purify the air after the passage of some loathsome beast.

Unhappily for Paris there were worse enemies than William and his square-heads lurking in the background, enemies long suspected and feared, and now to be revealed in all their power for evil.

With the opening of the gates began an emigration of the respectable classes. Husbands and fathers hastened to rejoin their families, provincials returned to their provinces—one hundred thousand of the National Guard, good citizens, brave, loyal, devoted to the cause of order, are said to have left Paris at this time. Those who remained behind were for the most part an armed mob, demoralised by idleness, by drink, by the teaching of a handful of rabid Republicans, the master-spirits of Belleville and Montmartre.

Too soon the storm burst. There is no darker day in the history of France than this 18th of March 1871, on which Paris found itself given over to a horde of which it knew neither the strength nor the malignity, but from which it feared the worst. Hideous faces, which in peaceful times lurk in the depths of a city, showed themselves in the open day, at every street corner, irony on the lips and menace in the eye. A day which began with the seizure of the cannon at Chaumont and Montmartre by the Communards, and the desertion of the troops of the Line to the insurgents, ended with the murder of Generals Lecomte and Clement Thomas, and the withdrawal of the government and the royal troops to Versailles.

When night fell Paris was abandoned to a new power, which called itself Central Committee of the Federation; and it seemed that two hundred and fifty battalions of the National Guard had become Federals. They were for the most part Federals without knowing why or wherefore. They knew as little of the chiefs who were to command them as that doomed city upon which they were too soon to establish a reign of ignominy and terror. But the Central Committee, sustained by the International and its powerful organization, was strong enough to command in a disorganized and abandoned city; and on the 19th of March began the great orgy of the commune, the rule of blood and fire. The offal of journalism, the scum of the goals, sat in the seat of judgment. Rigault, Ferre, Eudes, Serizier—Blanquisters, Hebertistes—these were now the masters of Paris. They held the prisons; they commanded the National Guard. They made laws and unmade them; they drank and smoke and rioted in the Hotel de Ville; they held their obscene orgies in palaces, in churches, in the public offices, and the goals, when the innocent and the noble were languishing in ghastly bondage, waiting for a too probable death. There were those who asked whether William and Bismarck would not have been better than these.

For Gaston Mortemar, an enthusiastic believer in Communism—in International, it seemed as if this new reign meant regeneration. He was stunned by the murder of the two generals, but he saw in that crime the work of a military mob. He knew but little of the men who were now at the helm. Assy, one of the best of them, had protested against the violence of his colleagues, and had been flung into prison. Flourens, the beloved of Belleville, was killed in a skirmish with the Versaillais, while the Commune was still young. Hard for a man of intellect and honor to believe in the scum of humanity which now ruled at the Hotel de Ville, and strutted in tinsel and feathers, like mountebanks at a fair. But Gaston had faith in the cause if he doubted the men.

That red rag flying from the pinnacles, where the tricolor had so lately hung, was, to his mind, a symbol of man's equal rights, the uprising of a down-trodden people, the divine right of every man to be his own master. For this cause he wrote with all the fervor and force of his pen.

The arrest of the Archbishop and his fellow-sufferers, on the 6th of April, was the first shock which disturbed Gaston Mortemar's faith in the men who ruled Paris. That act appeared unjustifiable even in the eyes of one who held the sanctity of the priesthood somewhat lightly. The spotless reputation and noble character of the chief victim made the deed sacrilege. Gaston did not measure the words in which he denounced this arrest. He had expressed himself strongly also upon the imprisonment of Citoyen Bonjean, the good President. From that hour the Red Flag was a suspected paper. The man who was not with the Commune, heart and hand; in its worst follies, its bloodiest crimes, was a marked man.

The denunciation of Gustave Chaudey, the journalist, by Vermesch, the editor of the infamous Pere Duchene, followed within twenty-four hours by his arrest and imprisonment, was the next rude blow. Again Gaston denounced the tyrants of the Hotel de Ville; and this time retaliation was immediate. The Red Flag was suppressed, and proprietor and contributors were threatened with arrest. Gaston's occupation was gone. His economies of the past had been exhausted by the evil days of the siege, and he found himself penniless.

He was not altogether disheartened. He sat himself down to write satirical ballads, which were printed, secretly, at the old office, and sold by the hawkers in the streets; and in these days of fever-heat and perpetual agitation, the public pence flowed freely for the purchase of squibs, which hit right or left, Versailles or Paris, Republic or Commune. The little household in the Rue Git le Cœur, a fragile bark to be tossed on such a tempestuous sea, managed thus to breast the waves gallantly for a little while longer, and Durand's kindly offer of help was refused, as not yet needed.

Soon after hearing of the arrest of the Archbishop and the other priests, Gaston made a pilgrimage a little way out of Paris. He went to visit his old friends the Dominican monks, at the school of Albert the Great, and to ascertain for himself whether any storm-cloud was darkening over those defenceless heads. Who could tell where those in power might look for their next victims? Priests and sergents de ville were the betes noires of the Communards.

All was tranquil at the Dominican School. The house had been turned into an ambulance by the fathers during the siege; and it was still used for the same purpose under the Commune. The Dominicans could have no affection for a government which turned churches into clubs, forbade public worship, and imprisoned priests; but they were ready to give shelter to the wounded Federals, and to attend them with that divine charity which asks no questions as to the creed of the sufferer. They had a right to suppose that the Geneva Cross would protect their homes.

Out of doors they did not pass without insults. The house had the reputation of being rich, and the Communards began to talk of hidden treasures, and of a reactionary spirit among the fathers. The Dominicans let them say their say, turned a deaf ear to opprobrious epithets, appeared in public as little as possible, and confided themselves to the mercy of God. Gaston saw Father Captier, the good prior, offered to serve him in any way within his power, which, unhappily, was of the smallest, thanked him for all his goodness in the past, and talked with him of the future, which was not full of promise. And so they parted, each trying to cheer the other with hopeful speech, each oppressed by the dread of impending troubles.

Serizier, the colonel of the 13th legion, had established his head-quarters in a nobleman's chateau adjoining the Dominican School, and looked with no friendly eye upon the fathers, whose garden lay within sight of his drawing-room windows. The seizure of the fort at Issy aggravated the already dangerous position of the monks. The Federals, forced to evacuate their position, fell back upon Arcueil and Cachan, and the 13th legion encamped in the environs of the Dominican School. The fathers began to fear that the Geneva Cross would not protect them forever.

On May 17th a fire broke out in the roof of the chateau occupied by Serizier. The Dominicans hurried to the rescue, tucked up their robes, and succeeded in extinguishing the flames. Serizier sent for them, and they appeared before him, expecting to be thanked and praised.

To their surprise, they were treated as spies, sergents de ville in disguise; they were accused of having themselves set fire to the roof, which was to serve as a signal to the Versaillais. They protested, but in vain.

"We shall make a quick finish of the shaven-polls," said Serizier.

On the 19th of May, Leo Meillet, commander of the fort at Bicetre, was ordered to arrest the Dominicans, with all their subordinates. To accomplish this perilous expedition he required no less than two battalions of Federals, one of which was the notorious 101st, commanded by Serizier.

Gaston Mortemar heard of the intended arrest on the evening of the 18th. He spent the greater part of the night going from place to place, interviewing those delegates of whom he knew something, and from whose influence he might hope something. He urged each of these to strike a blow in defence of those guiltless monks, to interfere to prevent an arrest which might end in murder. But in vain. The chiefs of the Commune had grander schemes in hand than the rescue of a handful of harmless monks.

Gaston was at the school early on the 19th. If he could do nothing to help his old friends, he could at least be near them in their day of peril. He was with them when the 101st battalion invested their house, and he shared their peril. Serizier recognised him as the orator of the Folies Bergeres, the editor of the suppressed Red Flag—a paper which had publish d some hard things about the colonel of the 101st. He ordered Mortemar to be arrested with the monks.

"So you are a pupil of the Dominicans," he exclaimed—"a worthy pupil of such masters. We know now where you learnt to spit venom at honest patriots. You shall stew together in the same sauce!"

The capture was made, after but little resistance. Father Captier, feeling the responsibility of his office as prior, entreated to be allowed to put his seal on the outer doors of the house. This grace was accorded without difficulty. Those who granted the boon well knew the futility of such a precaution.

At seven o'clock in the evening the prisoners arrived at the fort of Bicetre, after having endured every kind of outrage on the way there. They were flung into a yard, huddled together like frightened sheep, standing barricaded under frequent showers, stoned at like wild beasts by the National Guard. At one o'clock in the morning they were driven into a casemate, where they could lie on the ground and rest their heads against the stone wall. In vain the Dominicans asserted their innocence, and demanded to be set at liberty. The only answers to their prayers were the obscene songs of their custodians.

CHAPTER VIII.

GIRT WITH FIRE.

On the 21st, Father Captier was taken before a magistrate in a room in the fort, and submitted to an informal examination. Then followed two weary days, the 22nd and 23rd, during which the prisoners were left without food; and while the monks languished and hungered in the gloom of their prison the good people of the Commune were busy with the work of spoliation. Upon an order given be Leo Meillet, two battalions of Federal soldiers entered the school at Arcueil, violated seals, broke open doors, and carried off every object of value, including even fifteen thousand francs in railway shares, the savings of the servants attached to the establishment. These were impounded as national property, and passed by a kind of communistic legerdemain into pockets which were never known to disgorge their contents. A dozen ammunition-wagons and eight hired vehicles were needed to carry off the spoil.

The school only escaped being burnt to the ground by reason of its well-filled cellars. Once having descended to these lower depths, the Federals had no desire to return to the surface, until they had done justice to the Dominican wines. They drank and wallowed there side by side, like swine in the mire, till the hour for burning was past, and thus the school of Albert the Great escaped the flames.

On the following day Leo Meillet and the officers began to feel themselves in danger at the Fort of Bicetre. The army was drawing near. They resolved to evacuate the fort and fall back upon Paris, where numerous barricades, well provided with artillery, made resistance possible, and where the steep and narrow streets, the labyrinthine windings and twisting of courts and alleys, in the old quarter of the city made flight and concealment easy.

Carriages, carts, wagons, were hurriedly requisitioned on every hand, and then came a flight so eager that the prisoners in their casement were forgotten.

"Thank God!" cried Gaston, with a wild throbbing at his heart, forgetting, for the moment, that he was an infidel. "The Versaillais will be here in time to save us." And the good Dominicans, the men who had turned their house into an ambulance during the siege and the Commune, and who had nursed the wounded Federals without a question as to their belief or their impiety, began to offer up their thanksgivings, and murmur psalms of triumph and rejoicing—those versicles which Jewish captives of old had sung by the waters of Babylon.

Alas for those pious hearts uplifted in gratitude to the great Deliverer! not thus, not by Versailles, was their deliverance to come. They were to pass to paradise by a rougher road. Their joy had been premature, for they had reckoned without Serizier.

And yet this Serizier was one of the master-fiends in the Parisian pandemonium. A currier by trade, he had been in early manhood the tyrant and the terror of a great currier's factory at Belleville, and in the revolution of '48 he had been leader of the mob which hanged the proprietor of the factory at his own door. He had been condemned for some political offence during the Empire, and had taken refuge in Belgium. He reappeared in Paris soon after the 4th of September, and played an important part in the siege.

After March 18th he became secretary to Leo Meillet, and later chief of the 13th legion. He commanded twelve battalions, which fought well at Issy, at Chatillon, and at the Hautes-Bruyeres. Amongst these battalions there was one which he favored above all the others, the 101st, his own particular battalion, composed of his friends and companions.

A man of fiery temperament, a great talker, a deep drinker, a workman without industry, living upon money extorted from the public assistance, Serizier exercised a strong influence upon the ignorant and brutal beings who surrounded him. He was feared and obeyed by all the 13th arrondissement, which trembled before him. His hatred against the priests was a passion that almost touched on lunacy. He had profaned the churches by his foul orgies, and it was only the entry of the troops from Versailles which stopped him from selling saintly relics and sacramental plate by auction. Assassin and incendiary, it was his hand which fired the famous manufactory of Gobelins tapestry.

He was a man of medium height, square-shouldered, eyes shifty and restless, forehead low, lips thick and heavy, receding chin, the head of a bulldog. His voice was harsh and hoarse, his breath exhaled cognac. When he was angry that rough voice broke out in cursings and fury, more like the howling of a savage dog than the accents of humanity.

Serizier had his own particular prison as well as his own particular battalion. A house in the Avenue d'Italie had been transformed into a gaol; and here this man kept those victims who were known as his prisoners. At the final day he cleared his prison by a massacre.

Serizier had not forgotten the Dominicans and their companions. At his bidding a detachment of soldiers came in search of them, and they were marched into Paris by the Barriere Fontainebleau, amidst hootings and insults and curses from the crowd, a little company of twenty hostages, five of whom wore the flowing black and white robes of the order.

Here are a Peck of Peas, sweet Peas, if you will. Peppermint, Dandelion, Chamomile, Proficiency, Pain and Pantomime. Just try these Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets" and you will get well through the world without much trouble. The Pellets cure Constipation and surplus of bile, which lead to many different complaints. Enclosed in glass, always fresh, entirely vegetable, positively harmless. Any druggist.

THE THORNHILL MURDER.

Two men have been arrested for the murder of the young man at Thornhill. They give their names as John G. Wesley and James Stewart. The latter it was who fired the fatal shot. Both, it is said are well-known burglars, and it was while in the act of robbery that they were surprised by their victim. The prisoners were lodged in Toronto jail.

Patent Medicine.

Hundreds who have experienced the wonderful power of NERVILINE in subduing pain have testified that it is the most potent remedy in existence. Nerviline is liquid—effects a cure internal or external—relieves pain, strengthens the nerves, relieves children's pains, cholera, cramps, headache, sea sickness, summer complaints, &c., &c. Nerviline is sold by all druggists and country dealers. Only 25 cents a bottle. Try it.

A FAIR EXCHANGE.

"Johnnie, have you been fighting?" gravely inquired Mrs. Jarphly.

"No, ma'm," promptly answered the heir of the Jarphlys.

"John Schermerhorn, how dare you tell me an untruth" exclaimed his mother. "Where did you get that black eye, sir?"

"I traded another boy two front teeth and a broken nose for it," replied Johnnie as he crossed the woodpile.

Very Remarkable Recovery.

Mr. George V. Willing, of Manchester, Mich., writes: "My wife has been almost helpless for five years, so helpless that she could not turn over in bed alone. She used two bottles of Electric Bitters, and is much improved, that she is able now to do her own work."

Electric Bitters will do all that is claimed for them. Hundreds of testimonials attest their great curative powers. Only fifty cents a bottle at Taylor & McDonald's.

NO INCORPORATION.

A member of Parliament, who is also a leading Orangeman, stated to your correspondent that the Grand Lodge, which has now the Orange Bill in charge, will not introduce it again this session. The leading members of the Order do not wish to inconvenience the Government for the purpose of obtaining incorporation. A sop will be thrown out to one or two of the heads and this will settle the matter for the meantime at all events.

If You will not Hear Reason.

How can you hope to escape those evils which experience has demonstrated may be avoided, if her voice be listened to. How foolish it is to resort to dangerous drugs when a simple domestic remedy will answer the purpose. In the case of corns some resort to the razor and peril their lives, as lock-jaw is not impossible. While others use dangerous and flesh-eating austitutes for the great sure pop corn cure—Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. It never fails nor never can, for it is just the thing for the purpose. Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. Take no other.

OPENING MUSKOKA.

A deputation of Muskoka settlers, headed by Mr. Dill, M.P.P., waited on Hon. C. F. Fraser last week to press on the Government's attention the importance of making Peninsula Creek, between Fairy and Peninsula Lakes, a navigable stream. To the deputation the Minister of Public Works expressed himself in favor of making the improvement if the cost would not exceed $10,000. He assured the gentlemen that the matter would have the Government's consideration.

Wheeler's Tissue Phosphates.

When digestion of albumenoids or tissue food is defective, the blood fails to furnish the proper nutriment for the muscles, functional activity is impaired, and muscular debility or a sense of weariness constantly felt. This is soon apparent in the heart, the most faithful, hard-working muscle in the body, and we have heart starvation, or a weak heart, which is often mistaken for fatty degeneration or other organic disease. The feeble pulse tendency to fainting, impaired brain power, want of resolution and despondency, are purely functional disturbances from insufficient blood supply, and radically curable by the use of WHEELER'S PHOSPHATES AND CALISAYA, to restore nerve power and nutrition.

A SURPRISE.

Mrs. S. Brown, of Tecumseth street, Toronto, was surprised Thursday morning to find a perambulator and infant in the hallway of her house. The police were communicated with, and the mother was discovered to be a servant girl with a family on Sherbourne street, who acknowledged opening the front door and leaving the perambulator and child, alleging that Mrs. Brown's brother was the father of the child, and she wanted him to support it. The police refuse to take action, and the Mayor declines to admit the child to the Infants' Home.

W. W. McLellan, Lyn, N.S., writes: "I was afflicted with rheumatism, and had given up all hopes of a cure. By chance I saw Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil recommended. I immediately sent (fifty miles) and purchased four bottles, and with only two applications I was able to get around, and although I have not used one bottle, I am nearly well. The other three bottles I gave around among my neighbors, and I have had so many calls for more that I feel bound to relieve the afflicted by writing to you for a supply."

The American of the Future.

Joseph Edgar Chamberlain contributes an important paper to the September Century on "The Foreign Elements in our Population," in which he shows the tendency of immigrants of the same race to mass in particular States, giving to those sections a special foreign character. But in conclusion he says: "Supposing the entire mass to be fused, the Celtic and Teutonic blood, the Latin and Norman would be mingled in much the same manner as they were in the veins of the original English settlers. The American of the future, supposing present forces to continue and all white elements to fuse equally, would be almost as much an 'Anglo-Saxon' as the American of 1630. We have seen, however, that the races are not distributed evenly, and that certain types are likely to be locally predominant, at least until a long process of intermigration shall have welded the mass into a substantial likeness. The Wisconsin man of the near future, for instance, is likely to be almost a German, while the New Englander (still supposing all elements to combine) will be at least half an Irishman. But in the meantime all come to speak a single dialect; all wear the same costume; all come under the assimilating influence of an intensely active internal commerce; and all continue to accustom themselves to diversity of views and organizations in religion without strife growing out of such diversity or a thought of social separation on its account. May we not assume that such a state of affairs will tend to make the people a single and homogeneous nation, in spite of local diversity of origin?

"I believe that no one now accuses any large or influential portion of the foreign element of a set purpose to spread ideas subversive of our political institutions. It can hardly be denied that such tendencies and ideas as are most deprecated in the foreigners in the United States relate to manners, to mere habits of life and social practices. In these things we have undergone great changes, and would have undergone them, in a great degree, independent of foreign influence.

"So long as all elements blend, and the people remain free to seek their own happiness in their own way, it would seem to make little difference with coming generations whether their family tree shall have its roots in Plymouth or Boston or New Amsterdam, or in Castle Garden. So long as this freedom to seek a common happiness remains, it is of little consequence whether the new inhabitants are lost in the old or the old in the new. The greatest danger would seem to be that the migling of all elements, with a resulting evolution of a single nationality, will not proceed without interruption. No greater danger can threaten than that the population will split into two or more castes, with caste hatreds and conflicts. Whenever in any place a tendency to such a condition seems to be arising, all the proper influence of the State and of society should be brought to bear against it."

Avenging Her Kittens.

Andrew Bellas, a car runner on the Pennsylvania Coal Company's gravity railroad, lives at Plane No. 4 on the line of that road. One day recently a couple of small kittens were missing from his house, and he started out to look for them, as they were great pets with his family. As he was going through his back yard he saw the mother of the kittens stealing along through the grass. Bellas stopped, and, looking ahead of the cat, saw a large pilot snake lying in the grass, about six feet distant. There was no doubting the fact that the cat was stealing on the snake, and it was equally plain that the snake knew it and was ready for the attack. At first Bellas thought he would kill the snake at once, but he changed his mind and watched to see what the result of the impending fight would be.

The cat crept to within a foot of the snake, which was ready to strike at the proper time. The cat stopped, and raising her left fore paw cautiously held out toward the pilot. Like a flash the latter struck at the paw, but the cat was quicker still, and bringing her right paw into play dealt the snake a blow on the side of the head that knocked it back a foot or more. The reptile, evidently greatly surprised and maddened by the cat's attack, returned to the fight. Again the cat presented her left fore paw, and again the pilot struck viciously at it, only to again miss and to receive the violent right-hander alongside the head. This was repeated four times, when the snake, weakened and thoroughly dispirited, turned and tried to drag itself away. Instantly the cat sprang upon the retreating reptile, and with two or three strokes of her sharp claws tore it to pieces. She carried the remains of the dead snake to a distant part of the yard where she dug a hole and buried it.

Bellas went on to a rocky hill not far away, thinking the kittens might be there. He saw a crevice in the rocks which looked like a snug hiding-place for them, and he thrust his hand into it. Instantly he felt a sharp, stinging pain in his finger, and it quickly shot up his arm to the shoulder. A rattlesnake had sunk its fangs into his forefinger, and retained its hold with such tenacity that Bellas could scarcely shake it off. He killed the snake and hurried home. An old woman named Bailey sucked the wound, while Bellas drank plentifully of whisky. After sucking the bite thoroughly Mrs. Bailey applied table-salt to it. This and the whisky was kept up, and after twenty-four hours Bellas, who had passed into delirum, was restored to consciousness. At the end of three days he was pronounced out of danger.

The old cat had killed several snakes since the disappearance of her kittens. She never hunted snakes before. From that circumstance it is believed that her kittens were eaten by snakes, and that she knows it and is avenging their death by killing snakes.—Hawley (Pa.) Letter to New York Times.

A New Horseshoe.

A new horseshoe has lately been experimented with at Lyons, France. It is made entirely of sheep's horn, and is found peculiarly adapted to horses employed in towns and known not to be steady of foot on the pavement. The results of the experiments have proved very satisfactory, as horses thus shod have been driven at a rapid pace on the pavement without slipping. Besides this advantage the new shoe is very durable, and, though a little more expensive than the old one, seems destined sooner or later to replace the iron shoe, particularly for horses employed in large cities where, besides the pavement, the streets are intersected by tramway rails, which, from their slipperiness constitute a source of permanent danger.—Rochester Democrat

How the Bedouins Conquer Thirst.

In an article on "The Rescue of Chinese Gordon," to be found in the September Century, General R. E. Colston, late of the Egyptian General Staff, says: "In the 'Waterless Land,' water is the paramount question. If it be asked how a large body of Bedouins like the ten thousand who nearly destroyed the British squares at Tamai manage to subsist, the reason is plain. In the first place, they do not need the enormous trains required for a European army. They are the most abstemious of men. Each man carries a skin of water and a small bag of grain, procured by purchase or barter from caravans. Their camels and goats move with them, supplying them with milk and meat, and subsisting upon the scanty herbage and the foliage of the thorny mimosa, growing in secluded wadies.

These people could live upon the increase of their flocks alone, which they exchange readily for other commodities; but being the exclusive carriers and guides for all the travel and commerce that cross their deserts, they realise yearly large amounts of money. As to water, they know every nook and hollow in the mountains, away from the trails, where a few barrels of water collect in some shaded ravine, and they can scatter, every man for himself, to fill their water-skins.

On my first expedition, near the close of the three years' drought, I reached some wells on which I was depending, and found them entirely dry. It was several days to the next wells. But my Bedouin guides knew some natural reservoirs in the hills about six miles off. So they took the water camels at night-fall, and came back before daylight with the water-skins filled. An invading army would find it hard to obtain guides, and even if they did, they must keep together, and could not leave the line of march to look for water. Besides, the Bedouins, accustomed from infancy to regard water as most precious and rare, use it with wonderful economy. Neither man nor animal drink more than once in forty-eight hours.

As to washing, they never indulge in such wasteful nonsense. When Bedouins came to my camp, water was always offered them. Their answer would frequently be: 'No, thanks; I drank yesterday.' They know too well the importance of keeping up the habit of abstemiousness. No wonder they can subsist where invaders would quickly perish."

Maligned Americans.

Other nations love to picture Americans as rushing up and down with so much steam that a funeral procession cannot check business for an instant. It is claimed that we eat too fast, sleep too little, rush too hard, and that young men of 28 are all broken down with the excitement of business.

At 1 o'clock the other afternoon a boy about 12 years of age halted on the southeast corner of Griswold and Larned streets, flung down his coat, and and yelled:

"Hey there! Let 'er come!"

Before he had spit on his hands at least fifteen people had come to a stop. In about two minutes another boy had flung down his coat on the northwest corner of the same streets and yelled:

"Look out! She's coming!"

By this time the crowd had increased to twenty. The last boy threw a ball to the first, and the first boy threw it back. It was simply throw and catch. It was a sight as common as mudheads in the sidewalk. There was no slight of hand—nothing thrilling—no chance for accident; and yet seventy-five people came to a dead stop for ten minutes. Among them were lawyers who had cases on call, bank-messengers with their portfolios, wholesale merchants, and indeed all classes of business were represented. A policeman finally came up and asked one after another what the matter was, but no one answered. He ordered the boys off and they had nothing to remark. It was a man who had taken a seat on the postoffice steps sixteen minutes previously who slowly rose up, brushed off the dust, and observed to a friend:

"Well, I've got to go to the bank and get $9,000 to pay our men off this afternoon, and I guess I'll leaf along."—Detroit Free Press.

Curious Funeral Custom.

A very curious custom prevails in the good old town of Wooster, Ohio, which is new to me, and, I think is not known in many towns. When a person dies the relatives of the decedent send a printed notice of the fact of his death to every business firm of any importance in the place. The notice merely states that such and such a person is dead, and then gives the time of the funeral and where the services will be held. It is sent out as soon after the death as it is possible to arrange the details of the burial, but in no event is it promulgated later than the day on which the demise takes place. Another peculiarity is that the court house bell is always tolled as the coffin is being carried from the house to the hearse. It matters not who the person is nor whether it is man, woman or child, so far as the bell ringing is concerned. If the funeral procession passes through the main street, on which the court house is located, the bell tolls from the time the first vehicle has reached the square in which the building is situated until the last carriage goes out of sight. The death rate is very low in Wooster, or I should imagine it would be a gloomy place to live in. The tones of passing bells are not music which cheers.—"Walter" in Pittsburg Dispatch.

A story with a moral is told in this city on a venerable Judge, honored for his ability and integrity, and greatly beloved by all. He abounds in all those natural gentle and kindly courtesies that win hearts, and in these qualities, as on the bench, he is no respector of persons. Unfortunately he is a bachelor, and takes his meals at restaurants. While dining at Faust's the other day a rough-looking chap, standing at the bar, caught his eye and exclaimed: "Take suthin, Judge." His Honor gently declined. The invitation was repeated, when the Judge reluctantly accepted, not willing to have the man, whose countenance seemed somewhat familiar, fear that he was slighted. As they raised their wine-glasses the man exclaimed: "Drink hearty, Judge; you sent me to the pen for fourteen months once, but I don't hold any spite agin you on that account."—St. Louis Call.

These surgeons have no connection with any Yankee institutions. 7

Mr. John Duncan's New Departure.

We congratulate the people of Allendale and vicinity on the fact that Mr. John Duncan, so well and favorably known in milling circles in Peterborough, has purchased the Allendale flouring mills from Mr. L. Glover. He is an experienced and capable miller, having had experience in most of the flouring mills in Peterborough, and having been head miller in several of them. We have no doubt that he will give the people of Otonabee as good flour as they have ever used. The mills we understand are good, we know Mr. Duncan is a good miller, and we can heartily commend him to the patronage of the people of Otonabee.

Doubly Bereaved.

On Sunday last death visited the home of Mr. John Doherty, Market Clerk, the second time within a week, removing a little daughter four years old. A week before, another daughter, six years of age, was called away. Croup was the cause of death in both cases. Mr. Doherty has had a heavy share of bereavement, having witnessed the death of six of his children. His many friends in town and country will give him their warmest sympathy in his great bereavement.

Telephone Arrangements

The Bell Telephone Company expects a very large increase of business this year, and a new plan is being adopted, which will enable the Company to open Exchanges at very low rates in small towns, where not many subscribers are expected, and where, consequently, the work will be light. Many hundreds of miles of new connecting lines will be put up, and such of the public as desire instruments for use on private lines will be accommodated to the fullest extent.

Annual Dinner.

The first annual dinner of the Dufferin Literary Club will be held at the Oriental Hotel on Monday evening, February 16th. It is hoped that all the members including the honorary members will be present and assist in promoting the success of the occasion. Tickets may be obtained from the committee or from Mr. Cushen, Secretary-Treasurer at the Bank of Commerce. The Society has the support of the leading men in Peterborough, and we have no doubt, but that the first banquet will prove a successful one.

A New Amusement.

Lovers of fun and healthy exercise will be pleased to learn that the new Roller Skating Rink, on Water street, will shortly be ready. A good staff of workmen is employed hastening its completion. Peterborough will ere long be able to boast of having the best roller skating rink in the Province. The two essential requisites for a rink of this kind are a well-laid floor and first-class roller skates. The floor of the new rink is laid with Mr. R. Rowe's well-known skill, and the skates are from the best American makers. With these features, a careful management and a public fond of healthy exercise, the success of the rink is assured.

Opened out last week at Turnbull's, new Black Dress Goods, pronounced by those who have seen them, "just perfection."

Arrival of a New Stock of Hats.

In returning thanks to the public for the most liberal patronage received, it is gratifying indeed to find that in spite of the almost unprecedented mild season before the holidays, business has turned out equal and financially better than last year, which had a good record indeed. The reason of this is not far to seek, and lies in the fact that goods sold are made up on the premises of the best quality. In taking leave, shortly, for a trip to Europe to personally select furs for next winter season, the public can depend that the reputation won will be upheld. New stock of Hats, English and American, have arrived. W. Lech. 7-1t

Auburn.

"Sweet Auburn, loveliest village of the plain," may not be the way to describe it, but it is certain that our Auburn is a stirring little world of itself, and carries on a good deal of good work. In the Mission church on Thursday evening a pleasant entertainment under the auspices of the Auburn Temperance Society took place. Mr. James Kendry occupied the chair, and Mr. R. Meade gave an excellent [illegible] lantern exhibition. Misses Stevenson, Rose, Moyce and Hourie and Mrs. Hourie gave vocal solos. Messrs. Hartley and Blackwell readings, and Misses Queen, Hammacher and McIntyre and Mrs. Hartley, recitations. Altogether a most pleasant and profitable evening was spent.

Dr. McLellan's Lecture.

It is unfortunate that the lecture of Dr. McLellan, Director of Normal Schools and Teachers' Institutes, was so thinly attended last Thursday night. It cannot but be presumed that this was largely due to the out-of-the-way place in which the lecture was delivered—the Court House. The public are not accustomed to resort thither except, usually, under special invitation from Her Majesty, in the form of a subpœna or summons. Announcing a public lecture in the Court House seems to be an admirable way of showing "how not to do it." It is to be regretted that the authorities of the local Teachers' Convention made such a selection. They seem to have failed to recognise the fact that the subject was one of popular interest, and not merely of interest to the teaching profession. The subject of education is steadily assuming a more prominent place in the public mind, and the advisability of popularising it is too evident to require assertion. We make these remarks for the purpose of calling attention to the probably real cause of Dr. McLellan's lecture being so thinly attended, that he was led to adapt his remarks to the chiefly professional nature of his hearing, instead of delivering a popular lecture on "National Education;" and also to remove the possibility of reproach from the people of Peterborough in reference to a lack of interest in educational matters. If the meeting had been held in some more usual and, comparatively, more accessible place of public resort, we are sure the circumstances would have been largely different. It is to be hoped that when a gentleman of Dr. McLellan's ability and familiarity with educational subjects, is again brought to Peterborough, arrangements will be made to secure, as far as an accessible place of meeting is concerned, a large attendance of the general public.

Salvation Army.

The Salvation Army have been holding their ring song services on Wednesday and Saturday evenings, but owing to the former evening being the prayer meeting night in most of the churches the meetings hereafter will be held on Thursday and Saturday evenings, with silver collections at the door. These services are much appreciated and are largely attended. They are held in the old Baptist church, Aylmer street. Everybody is invited.

Curling.

Last Thursday afternoon, the Scarboro "Heathers," and the Lakefield club contested for the possession of the Caledonian medal on the rink here. The "Heather's" won by a score of 40 to 22. In the evening a friendly match was played between the Heather's and two Peterborough rinks, the former winning by three points. On Friday afternoon, Peterborough and Lindsay tried conclusions with the stones. The result was a victory for the visitors by the following score:—

A Grand Carnival.

The second of the series of Fancy Dress Carnivals under the invariably successful management of Court Peterborough Foresters will be held on Tuesday evening, February 17th. Arrangements have been completed for making this a sun among stars in the way of carnivals. A magnificent list of prizes has been offered for the competition in costumes, etc., that will certainly lead to a strife that will secure the most gorgeous congregation of fancy costumes ever got together in Peterborough. In connection there will be played a curling match during the evening between representatives of different nationalities in costume, a prize being awarded to the winning rink. The Fire Brigade Band will be in attendance, and abundant and excellent refreshments will be supplied by a competent caterer. It is expected that Lord and Lady Lansdowne will be present and that the latter will distribute the prizes. The rink will be blazing with the light from six electric lamps, and will also be magnificently decorated. Reduced fares on the railways. Admission only 25 cents. Children half price. Remember the date, Tuesday the 17th February.

Bachelor's Ball.

A very pleasant and successful Bachelor's Ball was held in the new Opera House, Port Hope, on Tuesday evening last. There were between four and five hundred present, including several from Peterborough. Guests were also present from the principal cities and towns in Ontario. Music was furnished by Toronto's best orchestra, and all the other appointments and arrangements were complete. The bachelors are to be congratulated on the great success of their annual ball. The people of Port Hope are also to be congratulated upon the beautiful opera house they now possess, which is especially adapted to the purposes of a ball, being so situated with reference to the St. Lawrence Hall Hotel that the rooms of the latter can be used for dressing rooms, the entrance from the hotel being direct into the Opera House. The new Opera House is a very fine structure. The stage is large and well provided with scenery. It is flanked by four excellent private boxes, two on each side. The seating accommodation is increased by a gallery in horse-shoe shape surrounding the auditorium. This will seat about 400 and rests on iron pillars, and is provided with an ornate iron railing. Altogether the Port Hope Opera House is a commodious, convenient, well appointed Opera House, such as few towns in Ontario can boast of, and it must be confessed that it is the only thing in which our sister town can excel Peterborough, and in this respect we are a long way behind.

Opened out last week at Turnbull's, several bales of Grey Cotton. Now is the time to buy Cheap Cottons at Turnbull's.

PERSONAL.

Rev. W. C. West, formerly pastor in Lakefield, preached in the Charlotte-street Church on last Sunday—morning and evening.

Messrs. J. S. Hall and W. Brundrette, of Lansdowne Lodge, are delegates to the Grand Lodge of Sons of England, which met in Lindsay on Tuesday.

We are very sorry to know that Mr. Orm. Dixon has returned home on account of ill health, having been compelled to abandon professional work for the present.

In an item in our last issue, noting the appointment of Mr. J. Frith Jeffers as General Agent of the British Empire Mutual Life Assurance Company, it was omitted to add, "for Western Ontario."

Mr. E. B. Edwards was present at the general meeting of the Convocation of Toronto University, called to consider University Federation. He seconded and made a speech on the motion approving of the principle of federal union.

Rev. A. J. Broughall, of St. Stephen's Church, Toronto, preached the sermons at St. John's Church on Sunday—morning and evening. On both occasions special prayers for the success of the British army in the Soudan were added to the services.

Mr. T. Blezard, M. P. P., East Peterboro' has been placed on the Legislature committees in Toronto on Privileges and Elections, Railways and Private Bills. Mr. Carnegie, M. P. P., West Peterborough, has been placed on the Public Accounts, Printing, Municipal and Railway Committees.

The Lindsay Post thus alludes to the temperance lecture delivered in Lindsay on Thursday night by Rev. Mr. Bradshaw, rector of St. Luke's:—"Rev. W. C. Bradshaw of St. Luke's church, Ashburnham, delivered an excellent and interesting address on temperance work in general, during the course of which he was frequently applauded."

Messrs. J. M. Irwin, Geo. A. Cox, John Burnham and A. P. Poussette formed the delegation which went to Ottawa on Monday night to demand from the Government the appointment of a competent engineer over the Trent Valley Canal waters, so that a repetition of the blunders, that led to the shutting off of the water supply from a score of our factories, may not be repeated.

At the re-union supper of the Queen's College class of 1885, at Kingston, on Friday night, Mr. J. Jamieson Wright, of Ashburnham, occupied the chair, and Mr. R. Max. Dennistoun, the vice-chair. The latter, in proposing the sentiment, "Canada our Home," made a speech of considerable length and eloquence, and later on sang, to a college air, an original song. Mr. W. J. Kidd responded to the "Alma Mater Society" and also the "Alma Pulic Society,"—"The Ladies." Peterborough boys are always "on deck" when the matter arises of loyalty to the Sovereign or the sex, which are, in the matter of domination, convertible terms.

A CITIZEN HONORED.

A Compliment to Mr. E. C. Hill.

We take the following from the Port Hope Guide:—

Between the acts at the Grand Opera House last week on the occasion of the opening, ex-Mayor Hugel presented Mr. E. C. Hill, the superintendent of the improvements in the opera house, with the following

ADDRESS:

To E. C. Hill, Esq.,

SIR,—The undersigned citizens of the town of Port Hope wish to congratulate you on their own behalf, and they feel assured they do so likewise on the behalf of many others, on the successful completion of the charming opera house lately opened in the town, which meets a want we have long felt.

To your indefatigable labors the completion of this beautiful resort at so early a date, is no doubt owing, and the whole building bears evidence of your skill in all the requisites and requirements of a theatre, and in an equal degree exhibits your good taste.

Permit us to tender you our thanks for your labors, and to ask your acceptance of a small token of our appreciation of your efforts.

We remain, yours truly.

R. A. Mulholland, H. A. Ward, Dingwall & Ross, A. von Hugel, Stanley Paterson, J. G. King, G. M. Furby, R. Roddick, J. N. G. Lodge, W. G. Stevenson, Jas. Williams, A. W. Pringle, Thos. H. Ambrose, A. A. Adams, R. B. Williamson, P. E. Randall, D. Chisholm, W. H. Paraces, E. J. W. Burton, A. Purslow, F. E. Gaudrie, W. Mackie, T. T. Baines and E. J. Baird.

The present was a beautiful silver ice pitcher, and most artistically engraved.

Mr. Hugel, after reading the address, said that the citizens of Port Hope were under great obligations to the proprietors of the property, Messrs. G. A. Cox, J. Stevenson, and D. W. Dumble, of Peterborough, for their liberality in providing such a magnificent opera house, and on their good fortune in selecting Mr. Hill to do the work.

Mr. Hill, who was taken by surprise, said he had not a set speech, but he felt flattered that his efforts had met with the approval of the citizens generally, and said that strangers had been equally loud in their praise of the beauty of the work he had brought to so successful a completion.

Mr. Wm. G. Stevenson and A. A. Adams were on the platform with Mr. Hugel, and assisted at the presentation.

The "small token" alluded to in the address is a superb silver pitcher, with the following legend engraved on it:—"Presented to E. C. Hill, Esq., on the occasion of the completion of the new Opera House, Port Hope, Feb. 3rd, 1885." Mr. Hill receives our congratulations, and has reason to be proud of so great a mark of honor.

TEACHERS' CONVENTION.

THE TEACHERS' REUNIONS REVIVED.

Last Thursday, after considerable hybernation, the county of Peterborough Teachers' Institute met in convention at the central school buildings. There were about fifty teachers and educationists present. Mr. Brown, Inspector, occupied the chair. Messrs Coleman, Burgess, Hutchinson, Monck and McIlmoyle were appointed a committee to consider the disposition to be made of the funds on hand. The agents of the Canada School Journal and the Educational Monthly addressed the meeting on behalf of these publications.

In the afternoon Dr. McLellan, Director of Normal Schools and Teachers' Institutes, was present.

Mr. Hutchinson, of Norwood, gave a short address on teaching elementary arithmetic, and Dr. McLellan gave illustrations of the German method.

The report of the committee on the funds was adopted; it recommended that half of the subscription to any journal a teacher might elect to take, be paid out of the funds.

Mr. J. H. Long read a paper on spelling reform.

DR. McLELLAN'S LECTURE.

In the evening Dr. McLellan delivered a lecture in the Court House. His subject, "National Education," was somewhat modified owing to the attendance being largely limited to teachers. The speaker pointed out how Canadian education was for the masses, and free to all. State management of education was vindicated, and the necessity of higher education was insisted on. After setting before teachers the high responsibilities of their calling, the lecturer concluded, and a vote of thanks, moved by Dr. Tassie, seconded by Mr. James Stratton was passed.

On Friday Mr. McIlmoyle gave an address on penmanship, Mr. Coleman one on Entrance Literature, and Dr. McLellan spoke briefly on the art of questioning, which he continued in the afternoon.

A proposal of the Minister of Education to encourage teachers to a course of post-graduate reading was endorsed by the convention.

On motion of Mr. Stratton, seconded by Mr. Brown, Dr. McLellan was thanked for his interest in the welfare of the members of the convention.

The following officers were elected:—President, Mr. H. Kay Coleman; vice-president, Mr. Barton Earle; secretary, Mr. W. Beattie; managing committee, Misses Fair and Wright and Messrs. McIlmoyle, Mark and August. The convention adjourned.

Literary Notes.

JEFFERS' HISTORY OF CANADA.—We have received a copy of this work, which seems to be excellently adapted to the purposes of a school text book on this important subject. The author, Mr. J. Frith Jeffers, is an experienced teacher and well-qualified to to undertake the work he has done so well. While necessarily only an outline, an immense amount of information is given, and the pupil who masters this history primer will be thoroughly acquainted with the leading events in our history. It has been in use in our public schools for five years, and the revised edition brings the history of Canada down to the present time. It is an admirable work of its kind in every respect, creditable alike to the author and the country.

THE METHODIST ANNUAL FOR 1885.—This is the title of a most useful pamphlet edited by Rev. John McLean, B.A., and published by William Briggs, Toronto. It contains an excellent calendar, statistics relating to Dominion Methodism, the Annual and General Conferences, to the ministers and lay workers, Sunday School statistics, statistics relating to the missions, colleges and educational institutions and, in fact, to every department of the extensive interests of the Methodist Church, and a large amount of miscellaneous church information. It should find a place in every Christian, and especially Methodist, household. Its arrangement and typography are excellent, and it can be secured for the very low sum of 20 cents, from Wm. Briggs, publisher, 78 and 80, King street east, Toronto.

THE SCOTT ACT.

Preliminary Meeting in The Opera House.

Rev. Mr. Keefer gives a Summary of its Provisions and How it is to be Enforced - Dr. Fife Occupies the Chair - Senator Vidal, of Sarnia, has a Seat on the Platform.

As announced last week a meeting was held in the Opera House on Monday evening last, to take measures to have the Scott Act submitted to the electors of the town and county of Peterborough.

The Opera House was well filled, there being about eight hundred ladies and gentlemen present to hear the principal features of the Act explained.

Dr. Fife occupied the chair, and the clergymen of the town had seats on the platform, as did also Senator Vidal, of Sarnia.

After the object of the meeting had been explained by the chairman, Rev. Mr. Keefer, of the Dominion Alliance was introduced to the audience. He commenced his remarks by expressing his pleasure at seeing the different ministers present—an assurance of their hearty sympathy with and co-operation in the work. He was also assured by his Lordship, Bishop Jamot, that though unable to be present he would do all in his power to promote the success of the grand work about to be undertaken.

He referred to the great injury and misery that had been and was being caused by intemperance and the liquor traffic, and gave evidence to show the effect of the working of the Act in Halton, by referring to the criminal statistics of the county, showing that under the last eleven months of the license system the convictions for crime were 24, while under the eleven months of the Scott Act the criminal record was reduced to two—these two crimininals being non-residents from the counties of Grey and York.

Regarding its enforcement the rev. gentleman said that the Scott Act provided for its own enforcement. Commissioners and Inspectors were appointed to carry out the provisions of the Act. The judgment of a magistrate was sufficient and could not be appealed from. Officers could be appointed who were in sympathy with the Act, and it was not necessary for private individuals to prosecute, but it was and would be the imperative duty of the inspector to do so. Scott Act associations would also be formed, and together with the government they would see that it was rigidly enforced. Under the Dunkin Act there were too many things to prove: the exact time, the day, the place, etc., etc. With the adoption of the Scott Act this was all changed. All that was necessary to prove was that it was alcoholic or intoxicating liquor that was sold. The information could be amended to cover a period of ninety days. It was only necessary, to carry a case or conviction, to prove that there were on the premises articles that indicated a facility for sale, and there was a case. It would also be the business of the accused to prove that he was not selling. When a case came up, the defendant could be put in the box and made a compellable witness. In case he did not rebut the evidence and refused to swear, a prima facie case was clearly proven, and it was supposed that he was guilty.

WHO MAY SELL.

Any distiller or brewer, or wholesale merchant or trader exclusively in the wholesale trade, and duly licensed, may sell liquor by wholesale, in quantities of not less than ten gallons, or in the case of ale or beer not less than eight gallons, and only to such persons as he has good reason to believe will forthwith carry the same beyond the limits of any county or city in which the Act is in force. And to be consumed outside the same.

DRUGGISTS' LICENSES.

After pointing out that the effect of the Act was to destroy the retail sale of liquor in the county where it was in force, the speaker went on to explain who may sell. He said that in towns two druggists were licensed by the Lieutenant-Governor to sell for sacramental, medicinal, and mechanical purposes.

When for exclusively sacramental purposes, only on the certificate of a clergyman affirming that the wine is required for sacrament purposes.

When for medicinal purposes, to be in quantities of not less than one pint, to be removed from the premises and to be given only on the certificate of a medical man having no interest in the sale

When for use in some art or manufacture, only on a certificate signed by two Justices of the Peace, accompanied by the affirmation of the applicant that the liquor is to be used for only the particular purposes set forth in the application. The druggist is also compelled to keep a register of all sales, and make a return of them to the government once a year.

THE PENALTIES.

The penalties for an infraction of the law were for the first offence $20 and costs, $100 and costs for a second, and imprisonment for the third.

He concluded his remarks by showing on a map the counties where the Act had been carried, and those that were preparing to vote on it, and asked the fathers, mothers, sisters and brothers to prepare for a contest in this town and county, and place the liquor traffic where it should be—under the ground.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED.

As soon as the speaker had taken his seat the following resolutions were unanimously carried—there being no dissenting voice:—

The Rev. Mr. Terrance moved, seconded by the Rev. Mr. Manning,—That this meeting has learned with pleasure of the labours of the Dominion Alliance to secure the adoption of the Scott Act in the various counties of the several provinces, and also expresses its hearty sympathy with the efforts of the Alliance to secure the passage of a law prohibiting the importation, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquors as beverages in the Dominion.—Carried

The Rev. Mr. Bell moved, seconded by Mr. J. D. Flavelle:—"That having listened to the exposition of the Scott Act, and having learned of its very general adoption and successful operation where tried, it is the judgment of this meeting that steps should be taken immediately to secure the submission of this measure to the electors of the town and county of Peterborough."—Carried.

The Rev. Mr. McAmmond moved, seconded by Mr. J. Kendry "That a convention of temperance workers from all parts of the county be called at the earliest possible date, to meet in the town of Peterborough, to complete the work of the county organization, and that a committee with power to add to their numbers, to take the necessary steps to call the convention be appointed. Carried.

Senator Vidal on being asked to say a few words expressed the great pleasure it afforded him at being present. He hoped that Peterborough would add another to the long line of victories that had been gained by the friends of temperance.

A collection was taken up to assist in defraying the expenses of the meeting, which was closed by the Rev. Mr. Torrance pronouncing the benediction.

CONVENTION COMMITTEE.

The following committee was appointed to make arrangements for holding a convention at an early date:—Dr. Fife, convenor; Messrs. Geo. A. Cox, James Stratton, D. W. Dumble, James Kendy, Geo. Hilliard, J. W. Flavelle, John Carnegie, D. B. Gardner, and W. W. Johnston. The resident ministers, Right Rev. Bishop Jamot and his clergy, are ex officio members of the committee.

ASHBURNHAM MEETING.

On Tuesday evening a meeting was held in Ashburnham, at which Mr. D. W. Dumble presided. Rev. Mr. Keefer delivered an address on the subject of the Scott Act. There was a large attendance.

THE NICHOLLS HOSPITAL.

To the Editor of THE EXAMINER:

I rejoice to learn that soon the town and county of Peterborough will enjoy the advantage and the blessing of an hospital, in which the sick will receive proper treatment.

I have to congratulate my fellow county councillors for objecting to that obnoxious clause, by which it was originally intended to exclude Catholics from the benefit of the hospital. Thank God, we live in a country where before the law all classes are equally protected! The law of the land would not exclude any one on the score of religion from admission into any charitable institution which receives an allowance from the public treasury.

Still, as it is intended to have that institution maintained by public taxation, and as the Roman Catholics, I presume, are expected to contribute their share of the taxes, I fail to see how the Catholic body of this county could not be allowed to be represented on the committee or board of management. The Catholics form a considerable portion of the population of the county, according to the government census of 1881. The total population of the county of Peterborough is 30,482, and the Catholics number 7,685—that is to say, fully one-fourth of the whole population. We pay taxes as well as the rest. Were that hospital supported by private enterprise, those who would thus endow it could very properly stipulate to have it managed as they pleased, but when it is expected that it will have to be maintained, at least to a considerable extent, by public taxation, Protestant and Catholic taxation alike, both Catholics and Protestants ought to have the right to see that it is managed according to the proportion of taxes which each religious body gives to it. I have, therefore, to enter my protest against any attempt to exclude the Catholics from the management of that institution. However, should the Catholics of the town and county of Peterborough, choose, on some future day, to have an hospital of their own, they would be satisfied to renounce any share in the management of the Nicholls Hospital by being allowed to have their own portion of the taxes applied to the support of their own hospital. Could such an arrangement which would hold good before the law be entered into at the start? I am sure that my co-religionists would offer no objection to have the Nicholls Hospital maintained by a general tax on all ratepayers; but until that time has come they would insist to have a right to be represented on the board of trustees or managers.

In any case it would be expected that the Catholic clergy would have the right to visit that hospital at any time to attend to the spiritual wants of the patients, members of their church, who would happen to be inmates of that institution.

JOHN MOLONEY.

Douro, Feb. 13th, 1885.

NORTH MONAGHAN.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Pursuant to adjournment the Council of North Monaghan met on Monday the 9th day of February. Present the Reeve Joseph Forster Esq., in the chair Messrs. Brownscomb, McIntosh, and Johnston. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed. A communication was received from Mr. Whyte, General Superintendent of the C. P. R. railway stating that their engineer was instructed to report upon the condition of all the railway crossings of said railway in the Township; also from Mr. Soutteran Clerk of Cavan in reference to gravel supplied by Robert Howden for boundary between Cavan and North Monaghan. An account of $1.00 from George Stethem was received and was ordered to be paid. By-Law No. 319 appointing a Clerk, a Treasurer, Assessor, Collector, and Caretaker of Town Hall, received its several readings and was passed; all the old officers were reappointed. The Reeve reported that he and Mr. Johnston had sold the timber on quarter line on 7th concession to Robert Goodfellow Senior for the sum of $40.00. By-Law No. 320 appointing Path-masters, Fence-viewers, and Pound-keepers was read a first, second, and third time and passed.

On motion the Council adjoured to the call of the Reeve.

DUFFERIN CLUB DINNER.

The First Annual Banquet.

On Monday evening last the members of the Dufferin Literary Club held their first annual dinner at the Oriental Hotel, and if the first attempt was so signally successful, the yearly succeeding one, may be expected to be gastronomic and elocutionary phenomena. There was a good attendance of members and guests. The material part of the dinner was creditable even to the high reputation of the leading hostelrie where it was held. The spread was laid out with, literally, "Oriental" magnificence, and the guests showed their earnest sympathy with nature in her abhorrence of a vacuum. The chair was occupied by Mr. D. W. Dumble, honorary president, and the vice-chair by Mr. J. D. McIlmoyle and Mr. A. Stevenson, president and vice-president, respectively.

The chairman, Mr. Dumble, with a few words of earnest and graceful eulogy, proposed the first toast, "The Queen," and next "The Governor-General," both of which were, of course, heartily honored.

The toast of the evening was "Canada our Home," to which Mr. J. H. Long responded in a graceful, eloquently delivered and thoughtful speech—the speech of the evening.

After referring to the duty of patriotism, the speaker showed how worthy Canada was of the most ardent patriotism of her sons. The self-denial and enterprise of the early French settlers were graphically insisted on, and also the later heroism of the early settlers in the struggles of 1812 when a handful of colonists left their grain rotting in the fields to repel successfully an invader many times more numerous. These Canadians and their descendants had worked out grander political and social problems, peculiar to Canada, than had been done in the United States. Instance was made of the abolition of the seigniorial tenure of land, the abolition of slavery, the Indian problem, and later on Franchise reform and voting by ballot. The Clergy reserve question had been settled, and the work of Confederation had been well done. Canadians should strive to make themselves worthy of the past. It was pointed out how it was impossible for Canadians to be a homogeneous people, and a spirit of forbearance towards our French Canadian fellow citizens was urged. The speaker made an eloquent appeal for the maintenance of British connection, a tie that could not be severed without bloodshed. The grave questions that now disturb the harmony of the empire would yet be solved—the glens of Scotland would yet be peopled, and the Irish question would be settled. India, South Africa, Australia with their immense expanse of country as well as Canada, England as a centre would remain one grand and united nation. The British Empire, whose grand old flag waved over 310 million freemen and not a slave would endure forever, for it was founded upon the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. The speech was full of stirring passages and was honored with frequent and loud applause.

"The Army, Navy and Volunteers," was next honored. Song, "Red, White and Blue," Mr. Horning.

Mr. McIlmoyle, President, now assumed command and proposed "Our Educational Institutions," to which Dr. Tassie, Principal of the Collegiate Institute, responded, by an eulogy of our system of education, tempered, however, with judicious and friendly criticism.

"The Learned Professions" brought Mr. James Henry to his feet, and in a neat and well-delivered speech he pithily advanced all that could be urged in favour of the legal profession. He showed what an important part lawyers had played in the advancement of learning and science. The literary condition of a country was shown by the standing of the legal profession, and according to this standard Canada occupied an enviable position. Few countries showed more intellectual activity than Canada. Its colleges and universities drew students from the United States, and in that country the high literary and intellectual standing of Canadians was shown by their taking leading positions among our southern neighbours. The legal profession was foremost in the fight for civil and political liberty, and many eminent names of English, Irish and Scotch lawyers were quoted to prove the position assumed. In spite of the aspersions cast upon the legal profession, there was something noble and philanthropic in working to bring the guilty to justice and to defend the innocent.

Mr. Horning favored the company with a song.

"Our Mock Parliament" was replied to by Mr. Horning in a humorous speech, and also by Mr. F. P. Henry, who very cleverly acquitted himself. Both speakers dealt with the workings and aims of the Club, and many of their allusions referred to matters appreciated only by members of the Club.

Mr. R. Sailsbury recited in fine style "The Polish Boy."

"The Federal Parliament" brought Dr. O'Sullivan to his feet, who in a brief speech pointed out the excellencies of our political institutions. He also indicated some reforms which he thought were desirable, and vigorously denounced the mischievous tendency of extreme partyism. He complimented the Club, and judging by the examples of oratory heard that night, there would never be a dearth of parliamentary representatives.

"Manufacturing and Mercantile Industries" was duly honored.

Mr. John Bertram, after complimenting the town on the possession of so exceedingly creditable an institution as the Dufferin Literary Club, referred to the world-wide character of commercial pursuits, and asserted that along with their highest development went the highest form of civilization. He gave some wholesome advice to young men, and most emphatically denounced the ruinous element of gambling in commercial transactions, especially in the matter of stocks. He submitted a practical question for the consideration of the club at its future meetings, that was, why, when everything was plentiful and cheap, it was more difficult to obtain. He also urged the club to discuss the relative advantages of Free Trade and Protection. He favored the company with reminiscences of a Literary Club that was in existence in 1863, and gave an interesting account of the early history of the Mechanics' Institute. He urged the members to be practical, and to cultivate a tolerant spirit, one towards another.

"The Mayor and Corporation of Peterborough" was replied to by Mr. Melville Millar. He claimed that that body honestly worked according to their light for the best interests of the town, and that it was a much-abused body of men.

"The Honorary President and Honorary Members" was next proposed. Mr. Dumble, in the course of a graceful little speech, expressed his appreciation of the honor of being made Honorary President of the Club, and said he took a deep interest in its progress and success.

Messrs. Horning and Scott sang the "Larboard Watch."

"The Press" was replied to by Mr. S. R. Armstrong and Mr. Yokome, representatives of the Review and EXAMINER, respectively.

"The Ladies" drew a gallant speech from Mr. Deacon.

"Our President, Mr. McIlmoyle," was heartily honored, and Mr. McIlmoyle acknowledged the honor in the same graceful manner that marked the discharge of his duties during the evening.

"Our Host and Hostess" brought out a neat little speech from Mr. H. Levi, and Mrs. McIntyre sang "Then You'll Remember Me," in a very pleasing manner.

"Auld Lang Syne," by the company, brought the evening to a close.

We have to heartily congratulate the Dufferin Literary Club upon the great success of their initial annual banquet. The arrangements made were of the most perfect character, and were marked by a taste and refinement, beyond what usually attends such occasions. The excellent speeches made, were a practical proof of the beneficial results of the meetings of the club. It was an exceptionally enjoyable and successful banquet.

KEENE.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Cold, very cold, Keenly cold. No mails from east or west on Tuesday last owing to the heavy fall of snow, which completely blocked our very useful toy railway near Belleville. Said blockade interfered badly with the wishes of many who were expecting to shine, or be shone upon, at the great carnival in Peterborough that evening. Speaking of carnivals reminds us that Keene is to have one on Friday evening the 27th, inst. Don't mistake the date. The intention was at first to have it on the 26th, but that would interfere with the R. C. of the "Brethren of the mystic tie," so it is to be the 27th inst. We hope our talented Peterborough friends, whether minstrel band or scarred veterans of hard fought tournaments on ice, whose medals show their skill, will all come again, and be the centre of admiring gaze.

Speaking of admiring reminds us that we have a genuine admiration for our gentlemanly and exceedingly popular bus proprietor and driver, Mr. John Frost. He ought to be Irish, for he "gets off" many a witty saying that would do credit to that always witty race. For instance, when asked whether the numerous lady passengers he carried or the transportation of the mails was most profitable, he replied archly, "Ah, Miss ——— the ladies are far better than any mail." Could your town drivers come up to our cool friend Frost?

There was an impromptu ball held in our Town Hall on Tuesday evening. Your correspondent was not honored with an invitation, consequently cannot report. However, we learned that the music furnished by Mr. Freeman of Peterborough, was capital, and the dancing kept up "until all hours."

We are sorry to say that the branch store of Messrs. Fairweather & Co. is to be removed from our flourishing town, and taken to Fenelon Falls. Mr. Fairweather sold a good deal in the three weeks he did business here, but finds that the local and permanent men have too strong a hold on their old customers to make auction sales a thoroughly paying business.

We regret much to learn that Mr. David Moore is dangerously ill with inflammation of the bowels, caused by cold caught in Peterborough on Saturday last.

Two old landmarks were removed this past few days—Mr. Andrew Lumsden, aged about eighty-two, and Mr. Andrew Forsyth, aged about seventy eight. They were buried, Mr. Lumsden on Monday at two p. m., and Mr. Forsyth on Tuesday at same hour. The lonely widow of Mr. Forsyth has our heartiest sympathy. For over two years she has been a nurse to him, most tender and faithful, though for all that time she was almost a prisoner in his rooms; her gentle patience never flagged in its watchful attention to his comforts or necessities. May she long live to console and advise her children who are left to her, and at last hear the welcome words, "Come up higher." Mr. Lumsden was a widower, and his sorrowing family have our warmest sympathy.

BRIDGENORTH.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Business in the building line is booming at present; our enterprising contractor, Mr. G. Jopling, has secured the contracts for the erection of several buildings during the coming season.

A parlor social in the interests of the Methodist Church will be held at the residence of Mr. Aaron Nicholls, Bridgenorth, on Thursday evening of this week.

A number of magic lantern views, illustrative of a trip around the world, was given by a Mr. Fenton in the Town Hall here on Saturday evening last. The attendance was small.

The ball, held here last Friday night under the management of Mr. Ed. Mann, proved to be a success. About twenty-five couple, including a number of young people from Peterborough and Bobcaygeon were in attendance. Music was furnished by Prof. Doucet and Mr. Reynolds of Peterboro. An excellent supper was provided by Mr. S. G. Fobert.

Some of Turnbull's New Check Prints are so pretty and unlike ordinary Patterns, Customers have to handle them to make sure they are Cotton Goods.

SUDDEN DEATH.

I regret to have to record a very sudden death which occurred in our township. On Sunday the 8th of February Mr. John O'Brien, of the township of Galway, was married by the Rev. Father O'Connell to Mrs. Bridget Heffernan, of this township, and previous to their returning to Galway, where Mr. O'Brien has a good farm of over 300 acres, they went to the residence of Mr. Dennis Sullivan to visit for a few days. On Thursday Mr. O'Brien was taken ill, on Sunday he appeared to be getting worse, and Dr. O'Shea was called in, but was unable to give any assistance, as he died on Wednesday morning from inflammation of the lungs. Mrs. Heffernan has the sympathy of her friends and acquaintances in her sad loss, as this is the third husband. Mr. O'Brien was also married three times, and leaves an only daughter, Mrs. Thos. O'Neil, of Galway, to mourn the death of a loving father.

PORT HOPE.

A powerful hydraulic press, for taking out and putting in crank pins in locomotive driving wheels, manufactured in the Stratford shops, was shipped last week to Port Hope for use in the shops of the Midland Railway there. Though of small size it is of tremendous power, capable of exerting a pressure of 120 tons if necessary.

The contest between Port Hope vs. Whitby, for the annual Royal Caledonia Medal was played at Bowmanville in their fine covered rink on Friday, 10th inst., and was won by Port Hope by 5 shots.

At the recent session of the Counties' Council, auctioneers' fees were placed at, for village or township, $8; county, $25; United Counties, $40. No license to be issued to non-residents except for the county.

MANVERS.

Mr. James McAllister, an old settler of Manvers, died a few days ago at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. R. Jamison.

Mr. Jamre Dick, another old resident of the township, died on the 29th ult., aged 70. Deceased was well-known and highly respected.

HYMENEAL.

On Wednesday of last week our villagers were considerably agitated over the numerous peals of wedding bells which occurred here, and are still more agitated by the "peals" which it is prognosticated are soon again to sound. However, on Wednesday last, our worthy Reeve, Mr. W. H. Stevenson, led forth to the hymeneal altar Miss Louisa Knapp, of the firm of Misses Williams & Knapp, millíners.——Captain Birdsall, only son of F. Birdsall, Esq., of Asphodel, was united to Miss M. K. Butterfield, eldest daughter of Mr. J. A. Butterfield, postmaster.——Mr. Archibald Scott, oldest son of Mr. Walter Scott, of Asphodel, was united to Miss Jennie Eaton, eldest daughter of Mr. W. Eaton, of Norwood. After they had been indissolubly joined together in the holy bonds of matrimony the newly married couples, with a number of their friends, partook of a wedding feast at the residence of their respective relatives here, and during the day took trains going east and west, to spend their honeymoon. May their shadows never grow less. All the brides received valuable and beautiful presents.

PULPIT EXCHANGE.

On Sunday evening last the Rev. Mr. Gee and the Rev. Mr. Carmichael, exchanged pulpits. This interchange of pulpits between these two Protestant churches is deservedly appreciated by both congregations, and evinces the popularity of both the rev. gentlemen in Norwood. It is to be hoped this good practice will long continue in this place, as it tends to foster a closer religious relationship between the adherents of both churches.

THE SCOTT ACT.

The Rev. Mr. Carmichael, at the close of his sermon on Sunday evening, intimated that it was the intention of the temperance people of this county to hold a mass meeting of the friends of temperance in the town of Peterborough on Friday, the 27th inst., for the purpose of discussing the advisability of submitting the Scott Act in this county, and if the meeting decides favorably it was intended to circulate the necessary petition at once. No doubt there is a favorable feeling in this portion of the county towards the Scott Act, and it will receive a large majority vote when submitted to the electors in the eastern towhships.

BURNED OUT IN THE NIGHT.

Mr. Alex. Fitzgerald's dwelling house was burned to the ground on Tuesday night last about midnight giving the family just time to escape with their lives. Seeing the blaze, we, accompanied by Mrs. Henry Roy and Hookeday proceeded to the scene. We met the family going to a neighbor's house; they informed us that they had just time to get out with scarcely any clothes. The house was completely enveloped in flames by the time we arrived on the spot. Mr. Fitzgerald, himself, had a narrow escape. He had, after rousing the family, gone up stairs to secure some papers and money. As he had not the key he tried to break open the drawer and was unable to do so. He found his retreat cut off by the devouring element and had to break open a window to escape, (quite without clothes,) cutting his hands and legs in doing so. He had succeeded however in getting $160 out of $200 from the adjoining drawer. Mrs. Fitzgearld, was the first to detect the smoke and Mr. F. tells that he believes in five minutes more they would never have been able to get out of the house. We are sure there will be a deep feeling of sympathy in their second great misfortune. The fire is supposed to have originated in the partition wall. There is $500 insurance in the Grange. Had the wind been blowing directly towards the barn instead of in an opposite direction there might have been a good deal of difficulty in saving them.

THE OLD FOLKS' VISIT.

"I will go and see him before I die."—Genesis, xlv., 28.

Jacob had long since passed the hundred-year mile stone. In those times people were distinguished for longevity. In the centuries after, persons lived to great age. Galen, the most celebrated physician of his time, took so little of his own medicine that he lived to 130 years. A man of undoubted veracity, on the witness stand in England, swore that he remembered an event 150 years before. Lord Bacon speaks of a countess who had cut three sets of teeth and died at 140 years. Jos. Crele, of Pennsylvania, lived 140 years. In 1857 a book was printed containing the names of 37 persons who lived 140 years, and the names of 11 persons who lived 150 years. Among the grand old people of whom we have record was Jacob, the shepherd of the text. But he had a bad lot of boys. They were jealous and ambitious, and in every way unprincipled. Joseph, however, seemed to be an exception, but he had been gone many years, and the probability was that he was dead. As sometimes now in a home you wil find kept at the table a vacant chair, a plate, a knife, a fork, for some deceased member of the family, so Jacob kept in his heart a place for his beloved Joseph. There sits the old man, the flock of 140 years in their flight having alighted long enough to leave the marks of their claws on forehead and cheek and temples. His long beard snows down over his chest. His eyes are somewhat dim, and he can see further when they are closed than when they are open, for he can see clear back into the time when beautiful Rachel, his wife, was living, and his children shook the Oriental abode with their merriment. The centenarian is sitting dreaming over the past, when he hears a waggon rumbling to the front door. He gets up and goes to the door to see who has arrived, and his long absent sons from Egypt come in and announce to him that Joseph, instead of being dead, is living in an Egyptian palace with all the investiture of prime minister, next to the King in the mightiest empire of all the world! The news was too sudden and too glad for the old man, and his cheeks whiten, and he has a dazed look, and his staff falls out of his hand, and he would have dropped had not the sons caught him and led him to a lounge and put cold water on his face and fanned him a little. In that half delirium the old man mumbles something about his son Joseph. He says: "You don't mean Joseph do you? my dear son who has been dead so long? You don't mean Joseph do you?" But after they had fully reassociated him and the news was confirmed, the tears begin their winding way down the crossroads of the wrinkles, and the sunken lips of the old man quiver, and he brings his bent fingers together as he says: "Joseph is yet alive. I will go and see him before I die." It did not take the old man a great while to get ready, I warrant you. He put on the best clothes that the shepherd's wardrobe could afford. He got into the waggon and, though the aged are cautious and like to ride slow, the waggon did not get along fast enough for this old man, and when the waggon with the old man met Joseph's chariot coming down to meet him, and Joseph got out of the chariot and got into the waggon and threw his arms round his father's neck, it was an antithesis of royalty and rusticity, of simplicity and pomp, of filial affection and paternal love which leaves us so much in doubt about whether we had better laugh or cry, that we do both. So Jacob kept the resolution of the text: "I will go and see him before I die." And if our friends, the reporters, would like to have an appropriate title for this sermon they might call it, "The Old Folk's Visit." What a strong and unfailing thing is parental attachment. Was it not almost time for Jacob to forget Joseph? The hot suns of many summers had blazed on the heath; the river Nile had overflowed and receded, overflowed and receded again and again; the seed had been sown and the harvests reaped; the star rose and set; years of plenty and years of famine had passed on, but the love of Jacob for Joseph in my text is overwhelmingly dramatic. Oh, that is a cord that is not snapped though pulled on by many decades. Though when the little child expired the parents may not have been more than 25 years of age, and now they are 75, yet the vision of the cradle, and the childish face, and the first utterances of the infantile lips are fresh to-day in spite of the passage of half a century. Joseph was as fresh in Jacob's memory as ever, though at 17 years of age the boy had disappeared from the old fireside. I [illegible] in our family record the entry of an infant that had died fifty years before, and I said to my parents: "What is this record, and what does it mean?" Their chief answer was a long, deep sigh. It was to them a very tender sorrow. What does that all mean? Why, it means our children departed are ours yet, and that cord of attachment reaching across the year will hold us until it brings us together in the palace as Jacob and Joseph were brought together. That is one thing that makes old people die happy. They realize it is reunion with those from whom they have long been separated. I am often asked as pastor—and every pastor is asked the question—"Will my children be children in heaven, and forever children?" Well, there is no doubt a great change in Joseph from the time Jacob lost him and the time Jacob found him—between the boy 17 years of age and the man in midlife, his forehead developed with a great business estate; but Jacob was glad to get back Joseph anyhow, and it did not make much difference to the old man whether the boy looked older or younger. And it will be enough joy for that parent if he can get back that son, that daughter, at the gate of heaven, whether the departed loved one shall come a cherub or in full grown angelhood. There must be a change wrought by that celestial climate and those supernal years, but it will only be from loveliness to more loveliness, and from health to more radiant health. Oh, parents, as you think of the darling panting and white in membranous group, I want you to know, it will be gloriously better in that land where there has never been a death, and where all the inhabitants will live on in the great future as long as God. Joseph was Joseph, notwithstanding the palace, and your child will be your child notwithstanding all the reigning splendor of everlasting noon. What a thrilling visit was that of the old shepherd to the Prime Minister, Joseph. I see the old countryman seated in the palace, looking around at the mirrors, and the fountains and the carved pillars, and oh, how he wishes that Rachel, his wife, was alive, she could have come there with him to see their son in his great house. "Oh," says the old man within himself, "I do wish Rachel could be here and see all this." I visited at the farmhouse of the father of Millard Fillmore, when the son was President of the United States, and the octogenarian farmer entertained me until eleven o'clock at night, telling me what great things he had seen in his son's house at Washington, and what Daniel Webster said to him, and how grandly Millard treated his father in the White House. The old man's face was illuminated with the story until almost the midnight. He had just been visiting his son at the capital. And I suppose it was something of the same joy that thrilled the heart of the old shepherd as he stood in the palace of the prime minister. It is a great day with you when your old parents come to visit you. Your little children stand around with great wide open eyes, wondering how anybody could be so old. The parents cannot stay many days, for they are a little restless, and especially at nightfall, because they sleep better in their own bed; but while they tarry you somehow feel there is a benediction in every room in the house. They are a little feeble and you make it as easy as you can for them, and you realize they will probably not visit you very often, perhaps never again. You go to their room after they have retired at night to see if the lights are properly put out, for the old people understand candle and lamp better than the modern apparatus for illumination. In the morning, with great interest in their health, you ask them how they rested last night. Joseph, in the historical sense of the text, did not think any more of his father than you do of your parents. The probability is before they leave your house they half spoil your children with kindness. Grandfather and grandmother are more lenient and indulgent to your children than they were ever with you. And what wonders of revelation in the bombasine pocket of the one and the sleeve of the other. Blessed is that home where Christian parents come to visit. Whatever may have been the style of the architecture when they came, it is a palace before they leave. If they visited you fifty times the two most memorable visits will be the first and the last. Those two pictures will hang in the hall of your memory while memory lasts, and you will remember just how they looked, and where they sat, and what they said, and what figure of the carpet and at what door side they parted from you, giving you the final good-bye. Do not be embarrassed if your father come to town and he have the manners of the shepherd, and if your mother come to town and there be in her hat no sign of costly millinery. The wife of Emperor Theodosius said a wise thing when she said: "Husband, remember what you lately were and remember what you are and be thankful."

By this time you will all notice what kindly provision Joseph made for his father, Jacob. Joseph did not say: "I can't have the old man around this place. How clumsy he would look climbing up these marble stairs and walking over those Mosaics. Then he would be putting his hands upon some of these frescoes. People would wonder where that old greenhorn came from. He would shock all the Egyptian court with his manners at table. Beside that, he might get sick on my hands, and he might talk to me as though I were only a boy when I am the second man in all the realm. Of course he must not suffer, and if there is a famine in his country—and I hear there is—I will send him some provisions, but I can't take a man from Padan-aram and introduce him into this polite Egyptian court. What a nuisance it is to have poor relations!" Joseph did not say that, but he rushed out to meet his father with perfect abandon of affection, and brought him up to the palace, introduced him to the Emperor, and provided for all the rest of the father's days, and nothing was too good for the old man while living, and when he was dead Joseph, with military escort, took his father's remains to the family cemetery at Machpelah and put them down beside Rachel, Joseph's mother. Would God all children were as kind to their parents. If the father have large property, and he be wise enough to keep it in his own name, he will be respected by the heirs; but how often it is when the son finds his father in famine, as Joseph found Jacob in famine, the young people make it very hard for the old man. They are so surprised he eats with a knife instead of a fork. They are chagrined at his antediluvian habits. They are provoked because he cannot hear as well as he used to, and when he asks it over again and the son has to repeat it, he bawls in the old man's ear, "I hope you hear that!" How long he must wear the old coat or the old hat before they will get him a new one. How chagrined they are at his independence of the English grammar. How long he hangs on! Seventy years and not gone yet! Eighty years and not gone yet! Will he ever go? They think it of no use to have a doctor in his last illness, and go up to the drug store and get a dose of something that makes him worse, and economize on a coffin and beat the undertaker down to the last point, giving a note for the reduced amount, which they never pay. I have officiated at obsequies of aged people where the family have been so inordinately resigned to the Providence that I felt like taking my text from Proverbs: "The eye that mocketh at his father and refuseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it." In other words, such an ingrate ought to have a flock of crows for pallbearers! I congratulate you if you have the honor of providing for aged parents. The blessing of the Lord God of Joseph and Jacob will be on you. I rejoice to remember that though my father lived in a plain house the most of his days, he died in a mansion provided by the filial piety of a son who had achieved a fortune. There the octogenarian sat, and the servants waited on him, and there were plenty of horses and plenty of carriages to convey him, and a bower in which to sit on long summer afternoons dreaming over the past, and there was not a room in the house where he was not welcome, and there were musical instruments of all sorts to regale him, and when life had passed the neighbors came out and expressed all honor possible, and carried him to the village Machpelah and put him down beside the Rachel with whom he had lived more than half a century. Share your success with the old people. The probability is that the principles which they inculcated achieved your fortune. Give them a Christian percentage of kindly consideration. Let Joseph divide with Jacob the pasture fields of Goshen and the glories of the Egyptian Court.

And here I would like to sing praises of the sisterhood who remained unmarried that they might administer to aged parents. The brutal world calls these self-sacrificing ones by ungallant names, and says they are peculiar or angular; but if you had had as many annoyances as they have had, Xantippe would have been an angel compared with you. It is easier to take care of five rollicking, romping children, than one childish old man. Among the best women of Brooklyn and of yonder transpotine city are those who allowed the bloom of life to pass away while they were caring for their parents. While other maidens were sound asleep they were soaking the old man's feet, or tucking up the covers around the invalid mother. While other maidens were in the cotillion they were dancing attendance upon rheumatism and spreading plasters for the lame back of the septenarian and heating catnip tea for insomnia. In almost every circle of our kindred there has been some queen of self-sacrifice to whom jewelled hand after jewelled hand was offered in marriage, but you stayed on the old place because of the sense of filial obligation until the health was gone and the attractiveness of personal presence had vanished. Brutal society may call such an one by a nickname. God calls her daughter and heaven calls her saint, and I call her domestic martyr. A half-dozen ordinary women have not so much nobility as could be found in the smallest joint of the little finger of her left hand. Although the world has stood 6,000 years this is the first apotheosis of maidenhood, although in the long line of those who have declined marriage that they might be qualified for some special mission are the names of Anna Ross and Margaret Breckinridge, and Mary Shelton, and Anna Etherside and Georgiana Willitts, the angels of the battle fields of Fair Oaks and Lookout Mountain, and Chancellorsville and Cooper Shop Hospital, and though single life has been honored by the fact that the two grandest men of the Bible—John and Christ—were celebrities. Let the ungrateful world sneer at the maiden aunt, but God has a throne burnished for her arrival, and on one side of that throne in heaven there is a vase containing two jewels, the one brighter than the Koh-i-noor of London Tower, and the other larger than any diamond ever found in the districts of Golconda—the one jewel of the lapidary of the palace, cut with the words: "Inasmuch as ye did it to father;" the other jewel by the lapidary of the palace, cut with the words: "Inasmuch as ye did it to mother." "Over the hills to the poorhouse" is the exquisite ballad of Will Carleton, who found an old woman who had been turned off by her prospered sons; but I think I may find in my text, "Over the hills to the palace." As if to disgust us with unfilial conduct, the Bible presents us the story of Micah, who stole 1,100 shekels from his mother, and the story of Absalom, who tried to dethrone his father. But all history is beautiful with stories of filial fidelity. Epimandes, the warrior, his chief delight in reciting to his parents his victories. There goes Æneas from burning Troy, on his shoulders Anchises, his father. The Athenians punished with death any unfilial conduct. There goes beautiful Ruth escorting venerable Naomi across the desert amid the howling of the wolves and the barking of the jackals.

John Lawrence burned at the stake in Colchester, was cheered in the flames by his children, who said: "Oh God, strengthen Thy servant and keep Thy promise." And Christ in the hour of excruciation provided for His old mother. Jacob kept his resolution, "I will go and see him before I die," and a little while after we find them walking the tessellated floor of the palace, Jacob and Joseph, the prime minister proud of the shepherd. I may say in regard to the most of you that your parents have probably visited you for the last time, or will soon pay you a visit, and I have wondered if they will ever visit you in the King's palace. "Oh," you say, "I am in the pit of sin." Joseph was in the pit. "Oh," you say, "I am in the prison of mine iniquity." Joseph was once in prison. "Oh," you say, "I didn't have a fair chance; I was denied maternal kindness." Joseph was denied maternal attendance. "Oh," you say, "I am far away from the land of my nativity." Joseph was far from home. "Oh," you say, "I have been betrayed and exasperated." Did not Joseph's brethren sell him to a passing Ishmaelitish caravan? Yet God brought him to that emblazoned residence, and if you will trust His grace in Jesus Christ you, too, will be empalaced. Oh, what a day that will be when the old folks come from an adjoining mansion in heaven, and find you amid the alabaster pillars of the throne room and living with the King. They are coming up the steps now, and the ajaculetted guard of the palace rushes in and says: "Your father's coming, your mother's coming." And when under the arches of precious stones and on the pavement of porphyry you greet each other the scene will eclipse the meeting on the Goshen highway, when Joseph and Jacob fell on each other's neck and wept a good while. But, oh, how changed the old folks will be, their cheeks smoothed into the flesh of a little child. Their stooped posture lifted into immortal symmetry. Their foot, now so feeble, then with the sprightliness of a bounding roe, as they shall say to you: "A spirit passed this way from earth and told us that you were wayward and dissipated after we left the world, but you have repented, our prayer has been answered, and you are here, and as we used to visit you on earth before we died, now we visit you in your new home after our ascension." And father will say, "Mother, don't you see Joseph is yet alive?" and mother will say, "Yes, father, Joseph is yet alive." And then they will talk over their earthly anxieties in regard to you, and the midnight supplications in your behalf, and they will recite to each other the old Scripture passage with which they used to cheer their staggering faith: "I will be a God to thee and thy seed after thee." Oh, the palace, the palace, the palace! That is what Richard Baxter called "The Saints' Everlasting Rest." That is what John Bunyan called the "Celestial City." That is Young's "Night Thought's" turned into morning exultation. That is Gray's "Elegy in a Churchyard" turned to resurrection spectacle. That is the "Cotter's Saturday Night" exchanged for the cotter's Sabbath morning. That is the shepherd of Salisbury Plains amid the flocks on the hills of heaven. That is the famine-struck Padan-aram turned into the rich pasture-fields of Goshen. That is Jacob visiting Joseph at the emerald castle.

Henry James—"Well, sir, you see that I am here with the manuscript on time. My new American novel is done."

Publisher—"Thanks for your promptness. I see the manuscript is very legibly written, too. Am glad of—but look here, you have Chicago located in Wisconsin."

Henry James—"So I have. What a beastly fluke. Chicago is in New Jersey, of course."

Publisher—"And you make the hero start out from San Francisco, call on the heroine at Boston in the same evening and get back to his bachelor den in San Francisco at 11 o'clock that night."

A Story of the Earthquake.

An amusing incident, which is much laughed at, was the panic into which a gentleman guest of one of the hotels was thrown. He was seated at a table near an open window with his wife and children. The shock had scarcely made itself felt before he was on his feet, pale as a ghost. His tumbler fell over on his plate, and the chandeliers above his head swayed and rocked and jingled. Short as the shock of the earthquake was, its rumbling had not yet died away before he had jumped out of the window. He was not injured, the distance to the ground being only a few feet. Fifteen minutes afterward he made his appearance, and when asked why he had jumped from out of the window, leaving his wife and children behind, he coolly remarked: "Well, you see, I thought I was going to be killed anyhow, and I didn't want all the family killed at once, so I left my wife to care for the children."—*Long Branch Cor. Silk Manufacture in America.

Silk manufacturing has grown wonderfully in the United States in the last thirty-five years, the most remarkable increase being from 1870 to 1880, when it was 250 per cent. This country stands second now in this branch of industry, France ranking first, and promises to lead before long. The value of the silk manufacture of 1880 was $41,033,045, New Jersey leading with $17,122,230, while New York followed with $10,170,140, Connecticut $5,881,100, Massachusetts $3,764,260, and Pennsylvania $3,491,840. A number of branches of the industry received a special impetus from the Centennial Exhibition, notably gros grain dress silks and handkerchiefs, while silk tapestry and similar goods are products of the last six years. With the growth of local manufacture the importation of foreign silks has fluctuated and of late years fallen off, the decline from 1882 to 1883 being $6,314,069, while the decrease will be still greater this year. Meanwhile the importation of raw silk has increased, and this country is now considered the best market in the world, suggesting possibilities in American cocoon raising which ought not to be neglected, as certain portions of the United States are perfectly adapted to the growth of the mulberry tree. American silk manufacturers have several strong advanages over foreign competitors. They have a good home market, can readily adapt themselves to sudden changes in fashions, and, while using more machinery, produce the best and most uniform fabrics. — *Springfield (Mass.) A German newspaper contains the following advertisement: "If Charles Frankerberger will either call on or write to Carl Schmidt, on the Kaiser Strasse, No. 26, he will hear something to his advantage. His wife is dead."

A Terrible Cough Cured.

"In 1877 I took a severe cold, which affected my lungs. I had a terrible cough, and passed night after night without sleep. The doctors gave me up. I tried Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which relieved my lungs, loosened the phlegm, and brought me the rest necessary for the recovery of my strength. By the continued use of the Pectoral a permanent cure was effected. I am now 57 years old, hale and hearty, and am satisfied your Cherry Pectoral saved me."

Bridgeham, Vt., July 15, 1882.

Croup.—A Mother's Tribute.

"While in the country last winter my little boy, three years old, was taken ill with croup. It seemed as if he would die from strangulation. One of the family suggested the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, a bottle of which was always kept in the house. This was tried in small and frequent doses, and in an hour's time the child was breathing easily. The doctor said that the Cherry Pectoral had saved my darling's life. Can you wonder at our gratitude? Sincerely yours,

MRS. EMMA CROMWELL.

159 West 126th St., New York, May 10, 1882.

"I have used Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in my family for several years, and do not hesitate to pronounce it the most effectual remedy for coughs and colds we have ever tried. A. J. CRANE.

No case of an affection of the throat or lungs exists which cannot be greatly relieved by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and it will always cure when the disease is not already beyond the control of medicine.

The expenditure of 1884 under the Supply Bill exceeds the estimates by $346,160. This was not altogether unexpected. It was known that the year would be one of exceptional expenditure in several important respects, and it has proved to be one of exceptional contraction in revenue in others. A careful examination of the accounts, however, will show that the Government have exhibited commendable economy in their management of their public funds, that where saving was possible they had effected it, and that where the revenue has fallen short of anticipations, causes quite beyond their control have contributed to the result.

A chief cause of the decline in revenue as compared with the estimates was the severe depression in the lumber trade. It will be seen that the receipts from this source were but $570,305, while the estimate of last year was for $690,000, a clear falling off of $119,695.

Another unusual feature was the expenditure of $71,998 in the purchase of drainage debentures. The receipts from this source were but $46,037, and a loss to revenue was therefore sustained of $25,961.

The expenditure on public buildings was unusually large. As a matter of fact it was more than double what it has been for the past six or seven years. A large part of this expenditure was incurred in the work of enlarging asylum accommodation, and a considerable outlay in this direction may be counted upon for the next few succeeding years. Despite the large amount of accommodation now provided there is not sufficient to meet this unfortunate want, and it is not improbable that steps to still further enlarge or add to the number of the asylums of the Province will be taken at an early date.

It is worthy of note that the large sum of $600,216 has been spent on the maintenance of Public Institutions during the past year. This is no inconsiderable portion of the total expenditure of $94,218 on hospitals and charities, indicates how thorough and liberal is the provision made and the expenditure sanctioned by the Government and people of Ontario in behalf of the unfortunate persons who are obliged to seek refuge in these institutions. An intelligent liberality and a satisfactory economy have always characterized the Government's policy in this department of their administrative work.

The expenditure on immigration last year was $43,369. The estimates for the current year, however, provide for an expenditure of only $19,000. It would seem that the Government has recognized the fact that in the present unsatisfactory condition of the labor market, the greatest caution should be observed in this matter, and only farmers should be encouraged to settle in the Province.

The expenditure on colonization roads reached the considerable sum of $185,772, but some $36,000 of this amount was paid on work performed and properly chargeable to 1883.

The receipts from liquor licenses exceeded the estimate of $200,000 by $11,253. This was, no doubt, chiefly derived from sums collected on Dominion licenses in excess of the collections under the Crooks Act.

From the proceeds of the sale of $13,400 of forty years annuities, bearing 4½ per cent. interest, in June last, the Government realized the sum of $248,191, and were thus enabled to take up the railway certificates falling due in June, and deposit $119,058 at 3 per cent. interest to meet December certificates.

It may also be noted that under the Dominion Act of 1884, re-arranging the subsidy payable to the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario between 1867 and 1873, this Province has received a sum of $71,207 above the ordinary income from Dominion sources.

"The light that lies,
In woman's eyes."

is a ray of heaven's own brightness; but it is alas! often dimmed or quenched by some wearing disease, perhaps silently borne, but taking all comfort and enjoyment out of life. That light of the household can be rekindled and made to glow with its natural brightness. Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" is a potent specific for most of the chronic weaknesses and diseases peculiar to women.

SEWING MACHINE MOTOR.

By means of a simple and conveniently worked device of coiled spring, an English inventor has succeed in dispensing with the need of driving sewing machines by hand or foot; a few turns of a handle winds up sufficient power to keep a machine going for over an hour. It is completely under control as to the rate of stitching, and can be applied to an existing machine at moderate cost

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles, there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness, and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome cough, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucus which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation, and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes, and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children, and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

The Transmission of Emotions.

The wife of Arthur Severn, the distinguished landscape painter, woke at 6 o'clock with a start, feeling a hard blow on the mouth, and with a distinct sense of being cut and bleeding on the under lip. She seized her handkerchief and put it to her mouth as she sat up in bed, and was surprised on taking it away to find that it was not bleeding. She concluded she had been dreaming. At breakfast her husband, who had been out for an early sail, appeared with a bad cut on the lip made at that hour by the tiller, which had struck him in a squall.

A case of transferred emotion is that of Rev. J. M. Wilson, headmaster of Clifton College, a senior wrangler and a distinguished mathematician. When in good health, one evening, while a student at Cambridge, he suddenly felt ill, trembled with a sort of fright, thought he was dying, tried to study, but could not, went to see a friend, who tried to distract his mind, but could not. After three hours it passed off, and the next morning he was well. In the afternoon a letter informed him that his twin brother had died the evening before.

A case of transfer of will is given by Alexander Skirving, a foreman of masons. While at work, one morning, he suddenly felt an intense desire to go home. It was a long distance and he could not well leave his work, and he resisted it. But the feeling became uncontrollable, and, though he believed his wife would ridicule him, he went home. There he was met by a woman who asked him: "Why, Skirving, how did you know?" He knew nothing, but he had been compelled to come home. He was told that his wife had been run over by a cab, and seriously injured, and had been piteously calling for him.

These cases do not go into the supernatural. They do not concern visions of the dead or assumed communications from them. They do not pass belief. We have all known of similar cases in our acquaintance. Science has laughed at them as incredible, but we may remember that Lavoisire said: "Stones cannot fall from the sky; for there are no stones in the sky." But there are stones in the sky, and stones do fall. The incredible happens, and it is of no use to deny such facts as we have given.—The Independent.

Two Sunrise Pictures.

ON MT. WASHINGTON.

At 4 o'clock in the morning a boy went through the hallways ringing a big bell. A dozen heads were poked out of their bedroom doors. "Come along," he said, "and see the sunrise."

In five minutes I was with a small crowd of other half-dressed and equally mystified mortals groping my way down stairs. A draught of the keen, cool exhilerating morning air was like an electrical shock. Beyond 100 yards around us there was not a patch of earth to be seen. It was like looking out on high mountains and deep valleys of beautiful snow, only the mighty hills moved and dissolved, while the valleys seemed filled with seething, rolling vapor. Suddenly the sun rose in the midst of it like a huge balloon, and the whole view was transformed into a sea of burnished gold. It was a relief when an occasional cloud of mist swept over the crest of the mountain and hid the dazzling sight from our view. It was like a glimpse of the promised land in a dream.—Cor. N. Y. Mail and Express.

ON THE RIGI.

A sunrise on the Rigi is regarded as one of the most wonderful spectacles in nature, and at half past 3 o'clock the next morning the doubtful melody of an Alpine horn was heard through the halls of the hotel, a warning to the sleepers that "now was the time and this the place" to see an Alpine sunrise. In a few minutes the guests, a motley throng, were assembled on the highest point of the mountain, a few rods from the hotel. The moon had gone down, the stars had faded, and far away to the northeast, over the Mountains of St. Gall, come "the streaks of the morning light." Now a beam kisses the silvered top of a mountain far to the south. Another and another ivy crest is lighted up, the golden orb begins to appear above the horizon, the rays descend to the valleys below and on the memory of all is stamped, never to be effaced, the beautiful picture of the sunrise on Rigi.—*Cor. The Infection of Good and Bad Language.

Passing a group of school children the other day, I heard one cherub say to another in a shrill voice, "Don't blame it on to me, I ain't mad," and they walked on, carrying an imposing array of books, where grammar and analysis had, I am sure, a prominent part.

It would be better for our youth if its teachers corrected the slang and mistakes of every-day life, and illustrated the rules they teach, for one child in a class speaking impure language will certainly infect the rest. The children of some households speak with a refined method as if by instinct, but it will generally be traced to parents, for we are all influenced by our surroundings.

A child lately questioned in Sunday school admitted "I done it," and a young man immediately after remarked, "They've went," instead of "they have gone." By such teaching children are unconsciously influenced. Well-bred persons usually speak slowly, with proper emphasis, and without abbreviations. Every person cannot possess a rich, full voice; it is the heritage of some families, and refreshing to listen to among the shrill, thin voices one meets so often. But cultivation does a great deal and nothing is more useful than to think of each word and speak the simplest language without haste, yet at the same time without drawl or affectation. The abandonment of superfluous adjectives would greatly improve our language. I was talking of a poem to a young girl lately, and she said it was "elegant," and when I described a new kind of taffy she said it was "perfectly lovely." There was neither sense nor reason in this mixture of terms. Another young girl is very pretty until she opens her mouth. Then her first words are likely to be, "Land's sakes," or "Clara an' me are goin'," clipping words and misplacing them until one is reminded of poor "Hannah Jane":

Her "dear" she spelled with double e,
And kiss with but one "s,"
But when one's crowned with passion,
What's a letter more or less?

"Speaking of the difficulty foreigners experience in giving the proper accent to English," said Captain Boalum, "reminds me that when I first came hither I could not speak English, yet you cannot detect in my conversation a foreign accent." "To acquire such perfection must have taken time," replied a lady. "Oh, yes; it required years." "Must have been young when you came to this place?" "Yes, I was very young. In fact, I was born here."

Never have too much to say. A sailor just arrived from China, offered a boxful of carved ivory and ebony articles for sale to a curiosity dealer. "Yes, they will do; I'll give you a louis for the lot," says the dealer. "A louis!" exclaimed the overjoyed tar, "why, then I am a rich man? I've got six thousand of them." "Oh, oh! that's a different affair, then," said the dealer. "If you have bought six thousand of them, I will give you two sous for them." Exit disappointed tar.

"I have a severe bruise on my arm, doctor, and would like to have you give me something to heal it," said Sam Simpson, who had always got something the matter with him. "All right," said the doctor, hurriedly writing a prescription. "Send this to the apothecary at once. Don't lose a minute's time. Run." "Then you think the wound is dangerous?" said the patient. "No. I am afraid it will completely heal up before I have a chance to apply the salve and enter up a charge of $2 against you."—Texas Siftings.

In the whist room of a fashionable club in Boston recently a gentleman was told that he was wanted at the telephone. "Oh, I can't be interrupted now," he exclaimed as he led the ace from a long suit; "ask what is wanted." The boy returned in a few minutes and said: "Your wife desires you to come home, and thinks you've been here long enough." There was a loud smile of course, and the called husband asked his partner, with a shrug: "Do you have a telephone in your house?" "Yes," was the immediate reply, "but my wife can't work it."—Every Other Saturday.

They were sitting together on the sofa in their parlor conversing in a low, tremulous voice. They had only been married a short time. He seized her hand, and said, with a voice full of emotion: "Birdie, do you know that it was your innate modesty, your apparent indifference, that made me resolve to win you at all hazards?" "Yes, George, the apparent indifference game is what captured you. You are the first one I tried it on. I slipped up on three or four occasions by gushing too much before it occurred to me to change my tactics. I wish it had occurred to me sooner," and she sighed heavily.—Texas Siftings.

The visitors at the pretty bathing place of Coutrexeville in France, being at a loss, while lounging about, for something to amuse their minds, conceived the idea as the bathing hour approached of changing the boards on which were inscribed: "For gentlemen, for ladies," and then, after half an hour, replacing them in their proper positions. Some very interesting mistakes and scenes resulted. Another day they changed the menu at the principal table d'hote for one which contained a list—in cook language—of the different diseases which it is supposed the invalids came to Contexeville to be cured of.—Foreign Letter.

She—Papa is very particular, and I doubt very much whether he will give his consent. He—Why? She—He is opposed to my marrying a man who is not established in business, and, George, you are not. How could you be, dear, when all your afternoons are spent at base ball games? He—But, my love, I have hidden the truth from you until now. I wanted to give you a glorious surprise. I do not go to base ball games merely to look on. She—You are not a——. He—Yes, I am the ——. She—The pitcher! Oh, George! This is indeed joy. I thought from the size and color of your hands that you worked in a tanyard.—St. Louis Critic.

The astounding proportions which the annual expenditure of the Dominion has assumed is a puzzle to the average citizen of the Dominion, but the waste which characterizes every department of Dominion Administration easily accounts for part of the increased rate at which the money goes.

When it is considered that during the past year there has been a very great scarcity of employment for Canadians, it is difficult to understand how the Dominion Government justify the expenditure of the enormous sum of $511,206 on bringing in new laborers to compete with Canadians and to take the bread out of the mouths of their families. Of this amount $101,178 was paid directly for passages for immigrants, and the balance was absorbed by expenses of the most extravagant character. One branch of this is sufficiently shameful to receive special mention.
